COOPER DRAWN INTO HIGHWAY PROBE BUT DENIES SITE CHARGE

Former Governor Says "Politics" Did Not Influence Case

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 19.—Sputtering and sizzling like a firecracker, the state senate's investigation of the highway department reopened here today with the committee in possession of a flat denial that former Governor Myers Y. Cooper and his associates "played politics" in buying a site for a highway garage at Troy, O.

State Senator David P. Lorbach of Cincinnati, the Democratic leader of the probe, openly inferred at a hearing late yesterday that the purchase of a garage site and building from M. T. Ditts of Troy was a political transaction.

Former Governor Cooper and two of his cabinet members, former Finance Director Harry D. Silver and former Highway Director Robert N. Waid, were called to tell their own stories of the deal and explain a letter written to the former governor by a Troy attorney.

All testified "politics" had nothing to do with the purchase. A photostatic copy of a letter from Attorney F. C. Goodrich, urging the governor to use his influence to get the board of control to buy the Troy property, pointing out that it would be advantageous in his campaign for reelection, was produced at the hearing.

The $8,750 paid for the site and the building was excessive, Lorbach hinted to members of the committee during the questioning. Asserting that he remembered there had been some dispute between Ditts and the state board of control, Cooper said he had no recollection of receiving a letter from Goodrich.

Ditts personally testified that Cooper was "under no obligations to me." Reinforcing this testimony, Goodrich declared that citizens of Troy were criticizing the Cooper administration for its failure to act on the purchase of the site.

Silver also testified, adding to the denials that the transaction was "political." He defended the board of control, of which he was chairman, for paying $1,100 as rental for the building, saying the board was "under moral obligation" to pay for the use of the property during the months while the deal was pending. He said the deal was a good one for the state.

Corroborating testimony also was given by Roscoe Bowman, Miami County road superintendent, and Walter Scott of Bellefontaine, former division engineer.

PAUL HERBERT WILL HEAD OHIO LEGION; CONVENTION ENDED

Toledo Chosen Next; Table Resolution On Prohibition

CLEVELAND, Aug. 19.—Legionnaires of Ohio returned to their every-day tasks today following a three-day sojourn to this city for the thirteenth annual convention of the state American Legion which closed yesterday with the election of officers and naming of Toledo as next year's meeting place after an anti-prohibition movement had been tabled.

Paul Herbert, former state senator from Columbus and a charter member of Ohio's first legion post, Franklin No. 1, received unanimous vote of the delegates for state commander to succeed John A. Elden of Cleveland. Harry Gilligan of Cincinnati was re-elected state treasurer and Reverend E. J. Gracey of Cleveland was named state department chaplain in the only other election of the final session.

Previous to the election of officers, the delegates spent the entire morning battling over passage of two resolutions—one calling for modification or repeal of the 18th amendment and the other demanding disbanding of the legion heirs, a subsidiary group for sons of world war veterans.

The "dry" issue brought before the convention this year for the first time, was tabled in a surprising climax of a bitter battle for adoption led by William E. Handley, former commander of Bentley Post, Cincinnati, author of the resolution. The resolution opposing the Junior Legion group was beaten by eighteen votes, 254 to 236.

Selecting the same convention city as the Legion, the women's auxiliary elected Mrs. J. Edward Johns of Massillon as state president before closing their convention which was held in conjunction with that of the Legion. Mrs. Lester M. Merritt, Columbus, defeated presidential candidate, was elected vice president.

District presidents named were: Mrs. Frank Neal, Lima, second district; Mrs. D. C. Warring, Norwalk, fourth district; Mrs. Harry Marsh, Columbus, sixth district; Mrs. Harry Thomas, Logan, eighth district and Mrs. O. C. McDowell, Orrville, tenth district.

SANGER GIVES REASONS FOR WITHDRAWAL

Candidate "Disgusted With Politics" Statement Says

Business reasons influenced Fred W. Sanger, E. Main St. butcher, to withdraw Tuesday from the race for City Commission after he had been nominated at the August 11 primary, he revealed Wednesday.

Sanger, one of four candidates scheduled to compete for two commission vacancies at the November election, declared his decision to retire from the race was due more than anything else to the fact he was "disgusted with politics."

The leading issue in the primary campaign involved the Xenia electric franchise controversy, but Sanger asserted he had remained entirely neutral on this subject. A report that he had identified himself with the group supporting the Citizens Public Service Co., a subsidiary of Fairbanks, Morse and Co., seeking the local electric light and power franchise, was emphatically denied by Sanger.

ALLOWED SERVICE BY PUBLICATION IN DEMPSEY DIVORCE

Estelle Restrains Jack From Getting Rid Of Assets

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 19.—Estelle Taylor today had secured a court order permitting service by publication upon Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight boxing champion on the ground that he is not a legal resident of California.

Fulfilling her earlier statements, Miss Taylor fought back at Dempsey's divorce suit filed at Reno Monday by filing one of her own here yesterday. In it she accused the fighter of extreme cruelty and in a statement outlined the differences encountered in arranging a property settlement.

Miss Taylor said she asked for $40,000 at the rate of $1,000 monthly but Dempsey blocked this plan when she demanded he guarantee the payments by putting up collateral.

Judge Haas granted the film actress a restraining order preventing Dempsey from disposing of a $200,000 trust fund and 100,000 shares of stock in a hotel. According to her affidavit the trust fund was composed of community funds.

BETHLEN CABINET RESIGNS TO REGENT

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Aug. 19.—The long rule of Count Stephen Bethlen, Hungary's sphinx-like prime minister, seemed at an end today when the cabinet tendered its resignation to Admiral Nicholas De Horthy, the regent.

The resignation was said to be due to the financial crisis which followed in the wake of German economic troubles and to French insistence that J. Gombos, minister of war, and Count Kibeleberg, minister of education, be ousted. It was expected here today that Admiral Horthy would call upon Count Julius Karolyi, minister of foreign affairs to form a new cabinet.

CONGRESS SESSION URGED BY PINCHOT

HARRISBURG, Aug. 19.—Gov. Gifford Pinchot today urged President Herbert Hoover to call a special session of congress to provide federal help for the unemployed. Copies of the letter to the President in which Gov. Pinchot outlined his stand were made public here.

The letter to the President was accompanied by a report on conditions as they now exist in Pennsylvania.

"A situation like this, in a state like Pennsylvania, leads many to believe that the present emergency is as vital to the people as the great war," the governor wrote.

Her 60-year-old husband, James L. Land, from whom she has been separated for two months, has been held, charged with Williams' murder. Land said he killed Williams in self-defense.

PLANE FORCED DOWN OFF KETOI ISLAND; AWAIT FOG LIFTING

Crowd Disappointed When Ship Brought Down In Bay

TOKYO, Aug. 19.—Forced down by fog on their journey from Petropavlovsk, Kamchatka, to Nemuro, Japan, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh made themselves comfortable this evening in their swift plane and prepared to spend the night at Anchorage off the rocky coast of Ketoi Island in the Kurile group that stretches like a necklace from Siberia to Japan.

Hemmed in by a dense fog, the famous aviator and his courageous wife decided to remain where they were until sunlight blazes a clear path for them tomorrow. Instead of risking disaster by taking off in the mist or attempting to taxi their plane to the rocky shore of the island.

News of their forced descent came as a keen blow to the population of Nemuro, a bustling little town on Hokkaido Island at the northern extremity of the Japanese empire, where the Lindberghs were scheduled to descend before reaching Tokyo, destination of their vacation trip into the Orient.

The descent off Ketoi Island was the second forced landing made by the Lindberghs after leaving Petropavlovsk at 10:45 a. m. (9:45 p. m. Tuesday, E. D. T.) shortly after the take-off, they were forced down in Avachinsky bay by engine trouble, but the damage was quickly repaired and the journey resumed.

While in the air, Mrs. Lindbergh tapped out a radio message to the Japanese aeronautical authorities requesting permission to make a descent in the Kurile Islands if an emergency arose. This permission was granted immediately.

Roaring southward toward their goal, the Lindberghs pushed their plane into an almost impenetrable blanket of fog. They kept up the battle for several hours anxious not to disappoint the thousands awaiting them at Nemuro, depending almost solely upon "blind" navigation to direct them to their goal.

They had covered about 350 miles of the distance separating the extreme southern tip of Kamchatka from Nemuro when they decided to make the descent. They brought their plane down easily on the waters of Buroton Bay, 200 meters (about 600 feet) off the coast of Ketoi, and Mrs. Lindbergh immediately radioed news of the landing to Japanese and American authorities.

The descent in Buroton Bay was made at 4:18 p. m. (3:18 a. m. E. D. T.) Even if the weather cleared speedily, the Lindberghs realized they could not possibly reach Nemuro until late in the evening and there seemed little hope that the fog would lift before morning.

The Japanese fishing trawler Shimushu Maru, the nearest large vessel to the point of descent, put out toward the Lindbergh plane when news of the descent was received at its base. The ship was within three hours ordinary cruising distance of the plane, but the trip was expected to be slowed up considerably by the fog.

No anxiety was felt over Col. and Mrs. Lindbergh as the sea was calm and their plane was moored at a point outside of the regular steamer route through the Kuriles, thus eliminating the danger of a collision in the fog.

REPORT CUBAN REBELS LANDED FROM STATES

Indicates Machado Not Successful In Suppression

HAVANA, Aug. 19.—Reports that rebel expeditionary forces had landed in Oriente province from the United States stirred Havana citizens to intense excitement today.

News of the landing of rebel reinforcements reached Havana through the strict censorship enforced by the Cuban government and led many to believe that President Machado was not sailing so smoothly as his communiques had indicated.

The president was reported still in Santa Clara province, where it was rumored that government forces had lost 180 men in an engagement with rebel troops.

Shortly after the government's announcement that Dr. Aurelio Hevia, reputed successor to General Menocal as leader of the insurrection, had been captured at Colon, rumors began to leak in via the grape vine route that Carlos Hevia, son of the doctor, had landed an expeditionary force on the east coast from two schooners.

These rumors were confirmed today by an unimpeachable source and caused rebel sympathizers, depressed since the arrival of the rebel chiefs, Menocal and Mendieta, in Havana as prisoners Saturday, to take on renewed courage.

The expedition was said to have landed at Jibara, Oriente, from two schooners with seven machine guns and 8,000,000 rounds of ammunition. One of the schooners flew the German flag and the other, the Norwegian. Among the rebels landing were said to have been a number of American Negroes.

Among the rebels who have surrendered at Santa Clara was William Fischer, American-born Cuban citizen, alleged to have destroyed property worth $15,000 belonging to a brother of President Machado. Another who surrendered was Major Celestino Balzan, reported killed at the beginning of the revolt eleven days ago.

It was estimated today that 95 per cent of the citizens of Cuba were in hopes that the insurrection would succeed, most of them placing responsibility for the long depression on the shoulders of President Machado.

MRS. LA FOLLETTE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Funeral arrangements were being completed today for Mrs. Belle Case La Follette, 72, widow of Senator Robert Marion La Follette, of Wisconsin, who died at Georgetown University Hospital late yesterday following an operation for intestinal trouble Monday.

At her bedside were her sons, Senator Robert M. Jr., and Phillip, governor of Wisconsin, and a daughter, Mrs. Ralph G. Sucher. Another daughter, Mrs. George Middleton, was enroute from California.

Mrs. La Follette, who has resided in the capital, since Robert Jr. succeeded to his father's seat, in 1925, entered the hospital late last week.

While never holding or seeking public office, Mrs. La Follette was ever by the side of her renowned husband, and campaigned with him in his political battles which made him the foremost legislator of his state and one of the strongest individual powers in the nation. Senator La Follette died June 18, 1925.

CAMPBELL ASKED TO CORRECT REPORT ON REQUEST FOR FUNDS

"Misquoted" Declares Finance Director In Columbus

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 19.—A request that Col. Milt D. Campbell, secretary of the board of trustees of the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, at Xenia, correct certain statements alleged to have been made by him at the American Legion convention at Cleveland Monday relative to the appropriation of state funds for the home had been made today by Finance Director Howard L. Bevis.

Campbell was said to have declared that when he phoned Bevis, urging the allotment of funds by the state control board for improvements at the Xenia Home, Bevis replied: "We have a lot of matters before us today. We may reach the Xenia matter tomorrow, if we have a session, but I doubt whether we will."

Bevis claimed that what he told Campbell was: "We have not taken the matter up yet, but will probably do so this afternoon. I will let you know."

Shortly after this conversation, Bevis said, the board authorized the expenditure of $160,000 for a new dining room and kitchen at the Home. The action of the board, according to Bevis, was taken before it received a telegram from Commander John A. Elden, of the American Legion of Ohio, declaring that "The American Legion, in convention assembled, unanimously demands action on the appropriation request of trustees of the O. S. and S. O. Home."

The convention authorized Elden to send the telegram after he urged the legion to assert its "political power to punish those who ignore its pleas for the proper care of the orphans," it was said.

The statement credited to Campbell by Bevis was also credited to Paul Fuller, commander of Foody Post, Xenia, in dispatches from Cleveland Tuesday.

Fuller, who returned to Xenia Tuesday night, said he had heard the conversation between Campbell and Bevis and that he believes action of the state board of control in releasing funds to provide a new building at the Home was due to the Legion intervention.

Fuller also revealed here copies of resolutions passed at the convention regarding the Home. One of these reiterates a previous suggestion to the trustees that "steps be taken so that in the very near future the children who become of high school age and prepared for high school may be sent to the public schools in Xenia."

TWO NEW YORK GUNMEN SLAIN

Defy Police Drives Against Crime

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Police drives against gangsters in New York were further defied today after two ex-convict bootleggers were shot to death virtually in the shadows of police headquarters. Three gunmen walking in "Little Italy" just before midnight recognized two of their rivals just ahead of them and opened fire, each gangster pulling out two pistols. In all thirty bullets were fired.

Joseph Cigna, 21, was shot seven times in the back and Anthony Justiano, 25, was shot ten times in the back. Both of the victims were gunmen, gangsters and bootleggers, according to police.

The assassins fled and had completely disappeared when police took up the chase. A bootlegger caused the double murder, authorities said. They claimed the victims were "small time" operators and were not connected with "big shot" New York gangs.

HEAVY PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO REPORT INTANGIBLE TAXES

Finance Institutions, Money Lenders Are Target Of Law

(Editor's Note: This is the eighth of a series of articles by International News Service, explaining new taxation laws adopted by the Ohio 89th General Assembly.)

By International News Service

Penalties of $100 a day await financial institutions and dealers in intangibles who fail to observe special provisions in the new Ohio personal property tax law.

Financial institutions will be held responsible for paying into the county treasury the taxes due on shares of stock held by their stockholders, and if they fail they are liable to the $100-a-day punishment, under terms of the law adopted by the 89th General Assembly.

All "dealers in intangibles," or persons running places of business for lending money, discounting, buying or selling bills of exchange or buying or selling bonds, stocks or other investment securities for profit, also can be forced to pay the $100-a-day penalty.

Dealers in intangibles also are to be required to collect the taxes due from the owners of shares of stock and turn them over to the county treasurer.

In both cases, some official of each firm must supply between the first and second Monday of March a complete list of the resources and liabilities as of Dec. 31, accompanied by a full statement of the names and addresses of the owners.

Besides the $100-a-day penalty, the financial institutions and dealers in intangibles also will be required to pay the regular amount due in taxes.

Imprisoned by Mistake? His Face His Misfortune

Owing to His Facial Resemblance to the Notorious "Two-Gun" Crowley, Patrick O'Brien Is Serving 20-Year Sentence for Crime He Claims Former Committed.

MRS. HELEN O'BRIEN and DAUGHTER EILEEN.

Picked out of the spectators in a court where he had gone to see the trial of a former school chum and charged with holding up a drug store, Patrick O'Brien, of New York, was sentenced to twenty years in prison, despite the protests of his mother that he was ill in bed with pleurisy when the crime was committed. Now Gerald Weed, former crime partner of the notorious "Two-Gun" Crowley, who is awaiting execution for the murder of a policeman, has confessed that he and Crowley committed the crime for which O'Brien was sentenced. O'Brien bears a striking resemblance to the killer and, with his mother, is pleading for a reopening of his case on the grounds that he is the innocent victim of mistaken identity.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Somebody with a gift for seeing things as they really are once remarked that the law is like a cobweb. It catches the comparatively harmless fly, but the vicious wasp and hornet can easily break through it. Never a day passes but the truth of the assertion is made evident. The other day we had the case of a young New York girl being finger-printed and sent to jail for the heinous offense of letting the strap of her bathing suit slip while in the sacred precincts of Coney Island, while the gunmen who shot five children in New York's "Little Italy" were roaming the country free as air.

Right on top of this comes the case of Patrick O'Brien, who is now in Sing Sing Prison serving a twenty-year sentence. According to O'Brien and his mother, the on-ly offense of which he is guilty is a remarkable resemblance to the notorious "Two-Gun" Crowley, convicted killer of a Nassau County policeman, and there seems reason to support their contention that a grave miscarriage of justice has been perpetrated on a boy who may be innocent.

The manner of O'Brien's conviction for a crime which he avers he did not commit throws an interesting light upon the manner in which the law put the indelible brand of felony upon its victim in what, his supporters say, was flimsy circumstantial evidence. One day last spring, O'Brien, who is now 19, read that a boy with whom he had gone to school had been arrested. Interested, he visited the court where his school chum was on trial and sat among a hundred or so other spectators. Now, it happened that the police had placed a number of hold-up suspects in different parts of the court room so that they could be identified by their victims, so young O'Brien had inadvertently stepped right into an impromptu lineup.

The boy's feelings can better be imagined than described when a man halted before him and exclaimed: "That's the fellow that robbed my drug store—he and two others."

O'Brien was arrested and indicted. At his trial his mother, Mrs. Nellie O'Brien, testified that her son had been at home in bed with pleurisy at the time that the robbery was committed. January 16 but she could produce no witnesses to corroborate her testimony. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation for leniency, but the judge sentenced the lad to twenty years in prison.

Now comes a confession by a former partner of "Two-Gun" Crowley, Gerald Weed, also in Sing Sing paying his debt to society, that he and Crowley were responsible for the crime for which O'Brien is in jail. It was only on Weed's confession that O'Brien's unfortunate likeness to the notorious gunman was noted.

A movement is on foot to reopen the case now, but if the law says "so sorry, I've made a mistake" it will be poor consolation for those of us who had the misfortune to be ushered into the world bearing a resemblance to a "public enemy."

Crowley, who is in the death house awaiting execution, refused either to affirm or deny the statements of his former associate, Weed, dismissing the subject with the nonchalant observation that he took part in so many hold-ups that he could not recollect an specific one.

However, there is one cheering aspect of the unfortunate business. Young O'Brien may consider himself lucky that he was not also saddled with the crime for which Crowley is now toiling the line that marks the starting point for his final parade on earth — The last mile.

FLYNN BLDG. TO BE REMODELED; JOHNSON BARBER SHOP TO MOVE

Plans for the removal of his barber shop and beauty parlor to a new location at 120 S. Detroit St. in a building owned by P. H. Flynn were announced Wednesday by Melvin S. Johnson.

The Johnson Barber Shop is at present located on the ground floor at 38 S. Detroit St. in a building also owned by Mr. Flynn and for the last five years Mr. Johnson has also operated a beauty shop on the second floor in connection with his business.

Contemplated remodeling of the entire building by the owner has made it necessary for the barber shop and beauty parlor to be transferred to a new location.

The room at 120 S. Detroit St. has been unoccupied for several years. It was used as the office of the Ohio Fuel Supply Co. until the company merged with the Dayton Power and Light Co. and the two offices were consolidated. Afterward it was used for storage purposes until the company's lease expired last January 1.

In preparation for occupancy by Mr. Johnson, interior of the room is being completely remodeled, work which will be completed in about three weeks. The space has a frontage of twenty-one feet and a depth of seventy-three feet and the room will be repainted, repaired and plastered.

Plans call for using a space fifteen by twenty-two feet in the front for the barber shop. This will be partitioned off allowing space for a four-foot hallway extending for twenty-two feet from the front entrance. Two doors will be built, one leading to the barber shop and the other to the hall. Directly in the rear of the barber shop a space twenty-one by twenty-eight feet will be converted into a beauty parlor to be operated by Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. Three booths will be installed along one side. In the rear of the room the remaining space, also separated by a partition, will be furnished as an apartment for the proprietor, the suite including a bedroom, kitchen, bathroom, closet, pantry and breakfast room. The location at 38 S. Detroit St.

has been occupied as a barber shop for nearly forty years. Mr. Johnson, who was originally employed there as a barber under a former ownership for six years became proprietor of the business in 1902 and has operated the shop ever since except for eighteen months when the business was re-located on S. Detroit St.

Disclosing his intention of completely remodeling his two-story building at Detroit and Second Sts., Mr. Flynn said that one of the construction features will be the erection of a new glazed brick front. The purpose for which the structure is being remodeled was not revealed by the owner.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be trodden down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill.—Isaiah, xxv, 10.

THE CHILD AND HIS MONEY

A bulletin recently prepared by the United States' Children's Bureau suggests the following relative to a child's use of money:

1. Give the child a regular fixed allowance; teach him not to beg and tease for additional money.
2. Let him learn by experience that denial must follow extravagance.
3. Teach the child not to expect pay for duties he ought to perform.
4. Encourage him to earn extra money by giving him a real job, preferably one which has real commercial value; pay him no more and no less than it is worth.
5. Be sure any work he does outside the home is not physically harmful and does not expose him to wrong influences.
6. Don't tip the child for rendering small services or for being good or polite.
7. Teach the child the value of saving for a definite purpose instead of for the mere sake of saving; let him learn the folly of spending all his money at once and going into debt to buy something he wants.
8. Teach him that saving things that cost money is as important as saving money.
9. Help the child realize the importance of giving as well as of spending and saving.
10. Remember that the example of financial responsibility parents set will influence the child's attitude.

OUR UNEMPLOYED

The conduct of the unemployed in this country during the current depression has afforded an agreeable contrast to that of the unemployed in certain other countries. Agitators have been among them, attempting to arouse class feeling. A few parades have been organized, which might have been staged in more prosperous times, as a small discontented element is always with us; and that is all the soapboxers have succeeded in doing.

The credit for this condition is due partly to sane leadership of organized labor and partly to the evident disposition of employers to go as far as they can to aid their workers; but in greatest part of all, it is due to the intelligence and conservatism of the rank and file of American working people. They are too wise to wreck the machine that has brought them thus far just because it is having some difficulty with this particular stretch of road. They are far wiser in this connection than some of the men who have been using their political prominence to broadcast the seeds of discontent with things as they are.

Complacency does not necessarily imply indifference. The points at which our industrial system has not yet perfectly adjusted itself to new conditions have not passed unnoticed by the working class; but as a class, American workers have shown a willingness to wait patiently for that adjustment, which must ultimately be made for the benefit of all concerned. The loyalty they have displayed to the existing order has been impregnable to radical agitation and will remain one of the consolations of the depression.

FLIERS IN TROUBLE

Clyde Pangborn and Hugh Herndon, Jr., got themselves into a peck of trouble when they flew over fortified areas in Japan with a camera in their plane. The Japanese authorities charged them with violation of the espionage law and fined them approximately $1,000 each.

Acting Secretary of State Clegg has officially denied that the fliers were acting for the American government, when they are alleged to have photographed forbidden territory; but even that may not absolve them in the eyes of the Japanese government. They have been, although we do not assume that they were, acting in the interest of some other government or taking pictures that might come into the hands of other governments. The Japanese authorities have a right to place that interpretation on their ill-advised action.

The point is that American fliers over foreign countries are guests of those countries, as much as if they had crossed the boundary in an automobile or a railway train. Stringent regulations have been adopted in many air-traveled countries to protect them against smuggling and spying. Soar as high as he can, above the present altitude record, an aviator is never above the laws of the country over which he is flying, as he will find out if he is forced to land on its soil. The Pangborn-Herndon incident proves that.

DON'T LIKE IT

An irate daughter of the state which J. Thomas Heflin once represented in the senate sends the New York Times a violent protest against calling his former constituents "Alabamians." They don't like the name. They are "Alabamaans." As she is president of the "Alabamaans in New York" she ought to know what's what.

The point is well taken. When the people of a state prize their proper appellation so highly that they "see red" at being mislabeled, their wishes should be respected. Arkansans pronounce the name of their state as if it were spelled "Arkansas." That's their privilege. Well informed persons everywhere follow their orthoepic dictum. Similarly, anyone who hereafter calls Alabamaans anything but Alabamaans—except in anger—will be judged guilty of ignorance or of gross negligence with the sensibilities of a great commonwealth.

It appears that on Long Island many midget golf courses are being turned into archery fields. Here many of them are just running to grass.

Kansas is a great state with lots of wide open spaces and all that. Why is there something always the matter with it?

After the Perseids of August come the Leonids of November, and in December, the hot air artists of Washington.

MY NEW YORK

BY JAMES ASWELL

NEW YORK.—No native New Yorker ever has a very clear perception of his city. He is too close to it. Columnists born here always fill me with awe for their intrepidity, because for a born-and-bred Manhattanite to attempt to write about his health with perspective and objectivity would seem as daring a performance as the operation by a surgeon upon a member of his own family.

Even for one hailing from a community as far away as Natchitoches, Louisiana (my home town), there are certain mental hazards in a daily examination of the fauna and flora of this astonishing preserve. Yesterday I was frightened by a purely psychic bugaboo.

Peering from a taxi window just off Broadway I noticed a new side-show for the Times Square circus. Around a hastily erected marquee was a flaming red banner proclaiming:

"MUSEE NAPOLEON—Napoleon and Josephine. Peace or War?" That was all—except the admission price, children 15c, adults 25c. What worried me was the fact that I didn't shout to the driver to pull up at the curb as I fumbled for my quarter. For an hour I gloomed because of the thought that had flashed through my head at sight of the Musee Napoleon: "Humph! Another racket for suckers!"

And that, I submit, is no attitude to brag about. It is no fun. Only suckers, after all, have much fun; and a year ago I'd have fallen for that poster like a shot. Was it come to pass that I was joining the know-it-all fraternity, the anti-wide-eyes, the tired old men of Manhattan? The symptom was dismaying.

Resulting, I have decided that I must get out of New York for a spell—and quickly. When simple little amusement shell games fail to panic me at sight, I should do something about it in a big way. I shall take a flying trip to Europe, maybe that should be an excellent tonic for Manhattanitis.

A brief trip, because if you stay away from New York more than a few weeks you miss new plays, new contentions in the celebrity arena, new side-shows like the Musee Napoleon, new and fascinating skin-games for depriving you of loose change and boredom. I shall probably take the Leviathan, too; aboard that mammoth craft the atmosphere is much like New York, what with New Yorkers aboard and the "biggest boat in the world" hallyhoo. . . . For reading matter I think I'll take a good guide-book to the town.

WITH A FAST CAMERA

All the books on the shelves in the public reception room of the Columbia Broadcasting System are in foreign languages, so visitors won't steal them.

Seats in boxes in Broadway theatres sell for less than orchestra seats because folks don't want them. Box office men slip them to out-of-towners.

For the first time in 20 years there is no "Theodore of the Ritz-Carlton." The most famous of New York maitres, one Tlize, is in France selecting the wine list of a new hotel that will be built in Bermuda. He will devote a year to assembling a "cellar." Of the old guard of New York's maitres four remain: Oscar Tschirky, soon to be at the New Waldorf-Astoria; Rene Black at the Central Park Casino; Charlie Journal, in a night club; the other and lesser known Theodore, surnamed Szarvaz, at the Ritz Tower.

Did you hear about the man who sent his mother-in-law a telegram on her birthday, choosing an appropriate message from the printed suggestion provided by the telegraph company, and got the wrong number? She received a message of condolence.

ON THEWING!

GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE WILL BE EVEN WORSE IN 1932, SAYS EXPERT

WASHINGTON.—"Grasshoppers," predicts W. R. Walton, cereal and forage insect investigator-in-chief of the agriculture department's bureau of entomology, "probably will be worse next year than they have been this season. 'It has been a fine summer for the orthoptera family—because dry, in the region where it's naturally most prolific."

"Destroying the creatures' eggs, by fall plowing, is a wise precautionary measure, if practicable—which is not, however, throughout much of the northwest. The soil is too sandy; disturbed in the autumn, winter wind would be likely to blow it away. Besides, mother grasshoppers are clever at finding safe places to hide their eggs."

"A wet winter and spring," observed Entomologist Walton, "may cut down the pest's proportions, for the tribe does not thrive on moisture, but relief in that form can't be depended on; the grasshopper-infested area is normally a dryish one, in the main."

"The orthoptera have parasites, too, and as the orthoptera multiply, so do the parasites. Thus through the parasites' ravages, the hoppers ultimately will be largely wiped out, though not completely; no parasite ever entirely exhausts its food supply. Unfortunately, next season is too soon to expect the present grasshopper plague to be materially modified by parasitic influences. By the season of 1933 they doubtless will have begun to produce substantial effects."

"All indications are that the farmers will have their own battle to fight in 1932."

"Once hatched out, grasshoppers yield most surely," continued the entomological expert, "to poison."

"To some extent a traveling, horse-drawn trap known as a 'hopperdozer' is employed against them. Under just the right conditions it has proved tolerably effective, catching and killing as many as 300 bushels of grasshoppers to 100 acres of alfalfa. Still, great numbers of insects escape it. Moreover, it is unserviceable on uneven ground or where crops have attained considerable height."

"Generally speaking, the best anti-grasshopper ammunition is poison—bran bait."

"The agriculture department's function in the campaign," explained the insect specialist, "is advisory; it hasn't the funds to supply the bran, arsenic and other ingredients to make the bait tempt the orthopteric appetite."

"It will furnish the recipe or pronounce on the efficacy of the lethal mixture; the farmer must provide it—with state aid, if he can get it."

"Grasshopper poison, in adequate doses, costs about 25 cents an acre—not a negligible item. I grant, to a man with several thousand acres to scatter it over, especially if he already is up to his neck in debt."

"Northwestern agriculture also, most unluckily, got off to a bad start early in the current season by relying upon an insufficiency of poison. It was not the farmers' fault; it was the fault of certain ready-made anti-grasshopper preparations, proprietors, who, claiming too much for their concoctions, led the farmers to employ them at about half the necessary strength—with the result that only the greediest grasshoppers perished."

considered the great-great grandfather of insects. They run the cockroach a close race, anyway, and, indeed, are closely related to him.

"Why, there is a glacier in Yellowstone park named for them—the Grasshopper glacier. Evidently they flew into it on one of their migrations, and have remained frozen in the ice for eons—thick as raisins in a pudding."

"His mass migrations," said Entomologist Walton, "are the one thing which slightly suggests something corresponding to a germ of sense in the grasshopper."

"He is a stupid insect, entirely devoid of anything hinting at the ant's instinct to follow a leader; or the bee's, of co-operation."

"Yet when, with a huge swarm of his fellows, he has eaten everything in his vicinity, some gregarious quality in him does bid him take wing with the rest of them and fly away, obviously bound for a fresh feeding ground. Even then the entire lunk-headed swarm is likely as not to fly into a glacier or a foodless desert or out to sea, if it is near enough."

Well, what accounts for the more or less periodic visitations of them?

"How they started," replied the entomologist, "I don't know."

"Since then they undoubtedly have had seasons—or several seasons in succession—of extraordinary multiplication, due to favorable weather and food conditions, and this multiplication has continued until parasitic pressure and a few years bad weather have combined to reduce them again."

"And so on, from the carboniferous age down to 1931."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

MENU HINT

Spaghetti with Cheese
Stewed Tomatoes
Cabbage Salad
Sliced Peaches
Sour Cream Cookies
Tea
This menu is equally good for luncheon or dinner. The cheese provides the protein usually supplied by meat, and the spaghetti takes the place of potatoes. The spaghetti dish serves six.

Today's Recipes

Spaghetti with Cheese.—One-half pound spaghetti, one-half cup grated Parmesan or Roman cheese. Cook spaghetti until tender. Drain. Butter large platter well and sprinkle with grated cheese. Spread spaghetti on the platter. Pour melted butter over it and sprinkle grated cheese over it.

Sour Cream Cookies.—One-half cup butter, one and one-fourth cups brown sugar, two eggs, well beaten; three-fourths teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon cinnamon, one teaspoon soda, three cups flour (approximately), one cup heavy sour cream, two teaspoons vanilla. Cream butter, add sugar and eggs. Beat until light, mix and sift thoroughly, salt, nutmeg, soda and flour. Add alternately with cream to first mixture. Flavor and mix to a soft dough, adding more flour if necessary. Roll out, shape, sprinkle with sugar. Place on a greased baking sheet and bake in a moderate oven (350 to 375 degrees Fahrenheit).

Suggestions

For cheese sticks, rounds, knots, squares, etc.: Cut rolled pastry into strips or squares with a knife. Sprinkle with grated cheese (bought grated) and bake in a hot oven. Sprinkle with paprika after baking. These make delicious salad or soup accompaniments.

Nature Made Fruit To Be Eaten

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

Fruits, like vegetables, are regarded as natural foods. Nature certainly intended them to be eaten: the only way fruit trees and berry plants can spread over the earth in a state of nature is by having the seeds carried inside the bodies of animals and deposited in the debris at a place distant from the parent plant. To do this Nature has to make the fruit surrounding the indigestible seeds luscious and attractive.

These considerations have caused fruits to be praised to the skies for their health giving qualities. Long before oranges as preventatives of high blood pressure were heard of there was the hackneyed saying, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away." Fruit and berries are certainly essential parts of any modern dietary. But it should be said also that they are not complete foods.

Fruits are naturally magnificent. Their skins or rinds keep bacteria and germs out. For this reason they are easy to preserve—I mean in storage—in a natural state.

Secondly, like vegetables, they star in bulk. They are not economical foods in the sense that it takes a great deal to supply a day's energy. And the very fact that they are bulky prevents them from being compact, concentrated foods like eggs. If you had to carry a week's ration on your back on a walking tour, you would pick milk chocolate bars rather than apples.

Now are they balanced. They have almost no protein, and few of them (avocado pear, raisins and dates are the exceptions) have even mentionable quantities of fat.

Most of the fruits have good quantities of the necessary minerals—calcium, especially, and also iron, sulphur and phosphorus.

Unbalanced and incomplete as they are, they have certain qualities in which they are strong. Their carbohydrate is in the form of very simple sugars—fruit sugar, or fructose, mostly, and maltose, and glucose. These substances are high-powered energizers—high-test gasoline.

Again, they are the chief source of vitamin C, which is the preventive of scurvy. As this disease affects infants and adults alike, it is a requirement of the diet at all ages. For this reason nursing mothers should eat fruit so that their milk will contain this necessary substance. The citrus fruits—orange, lemons and limes—are especially rich in vitamin C. It is destroyed by cooking, but in modern methods of canning and preserving it is not destroyed.

Applied to disease conditions, fruits are generally irritating to delicate digestions, especially to patients with ulcer of the stomach (though orange juice is often agreeable). For constipation they are the best of remedies. They form alkaline ash in the body and tend to counteract acidosis, and hence have been heralded as preventatives of high blood pressure and the degenerative diseases of middle age.

Editor's Note: Six pamphlets by Dr. Clending can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed, stamped envelope, to Dr. Logan Clending, in care of this paper, or Central Press Association, 1435 East Twelfth Street, Cleveland, O. The pamphlets are: "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Youths Feel Uncertain Of Friends

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: I am a boy 20 years of age. Two years ago I met a very pretty girl. I have gone with her many times but never steady."

"I feel very uncertain as to how she feels toward me. I know she likes me, but she won't tell me how much she really cares. I have told her many times that I loved her."

"How can I find out how much she really cares for me? I have gone out with other girls that she knows, and I know she doesn't get jealous of them. Is there some way that I can get her jealous, or don't you think that would help? I think I made my mistake when I told her that I loved her. I should never have told her that, should I?"

"MISTER X."

"DEAR MISS LEE: I'm in love with a very lovely girl and she told me once that she loved me, too, but she also said she wouldn't go with me steady."

"She is young and doesn't want to go steady with any boy, yet it is hard to love a girl and always see her with someone else."

"Should I try to forget this girl or wait until she is older and has a change of ideas? JACK."

Experts differ on the most effective way to win a girl, boys. Some say it's done by taking the citadel by storm—rushing her, in other words. Some say keep her guessing. I suppose different tactics are effective with different girls. Maybe you did make a mistake, Mister X, in telling the girl you loved her. Maybe she feels too sure of you. Possibly a little indifference on your part would have the desired effect. It looks to me as if she isn't seriously interested at present; it she shows no concern about your going with other girls; but maybe she has good control of her emotions.

Ask her for another date, be very attentive and do your best to give her a good time. Then don't call her up or ask her for a date for a good long time. Take other girls out, and if you happen to be in the same crowd when you are with another girl, be pleasant but distant. If she asks if anything is the matter, tell her not a thing in the world. Then ask her for another date and be very attentive again.

Maybe these tactics won't win her. I don't pretend that they are infallible, but they are worth trying. If you lose, don't be too cast down. There are other girls, you know, and you're young.

And as for you, Jack, wait awhile. If the girl loves you you can hope that when she is a bit older she will go steady with you. Provided that by that time you still want the same girl.

If present-day machinery were abolished it is estimated it would take 3,000,000,000 laborers to replace the work done by the machinery in the United States.

Advice On Care of Skin

By GLADYS GLAD

At this time of the year, when it seems as though the mercury in the thermometer never will stop climbing, very few skins require much cold cream or nourishing cream to keep them smooth and supple. Indeed, in some cases, even the use of a bit of cold cream as a powder base only is sufficient to cause a coarsening of the skin texture.

During the hot months the tiny pores are hard put to it to dispose of the excretions of the oil glands alone. And when cream is used on such skins these little organisms become overburdened with the task and become enlarged and coarse. Even if, after washing your face, you first close the pores with cold water, and then apply a light coating of cream for a powder base the temperature of the atmosphere will quickly open the pores, and the grease, no matter how small in quantity, will help to keep them open. And if you put on your thin film of cream and follow that with a cold water dousing to close the pores you will only shut the pores temporarily and harden the cream on the skin. The heat of the body and the air will speedily soften the cream and open the pores again.

The majority of us need only astringents in the hot weather to keep our skins looking cool and fresh. Add a few drops of benzoin to a basin of cold water and bathe your face and neck with it after you have cleansed your skin at night. Bathe your face as often as you can during the day with cool water, to which has been added a few drops of lemon juice, toilet water or benzoin. Or use a regular skin tonic or astringent to cleanse and refresh your skin, and to keep your pores closed under your make-up.

The extremely dry type of skin, however, usually requires just as much nourishing in the summer as in the winter. If your skin is of that extremely dry variety, and you continually expose it to the elements without protecting it in any way, your complexion can be ruined.

ed in the course of just one summer. It will become dry and leathery, discolorations will appear, and fine lines that are most difficult to erase will develop. A dry skin must be carefully protected with cream and powder during the hot months. And if the pores tend to become enlarged under this treatment, a very mild astringent may be employed in conjunction with the cream.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

Scars

Susan and R. D. M.: The lemon juice or peroxide bleach will help to lighten the discolorations. For complete and effective eradication, scars should be attended by a skilled skin specialist in their early stages.

Bust

B. R.: The length of time within which you may expect results from the bust-developing instructions depends upon your own physical constitution and your perseverance. Keep at it, and you'll eventually obtain the results you desire.

Cocoa Butter

Ruth Molinaro: Cocoa butter is indeed used for fattening purposes. Massage your face nightly with warmed cocoa butter. This will help to fatten the tissues, and round out the facial contours.

Cosmetics

Miriam: I think that a soft ochre shade of powder, soft orange rouge, and light lipstick, would blend harmoniously with your coloring.

Manager Jess Chambliss, of the Xenia Merchants, taking a hint from owners of big league ball clubs, has proclaimed next Sunday as "Ladies' Day" at Washington Park.

The attraction will be the second game of the current series between the Merchants and St. Adalberts of Dayton, the opener last Sunday having been won by Xenia, 5 to 6.

Manager Jess has been reading the papers lately and has discovered that the widespread practice among major league owners of designating certain days in the week or month as "Ladies' Days" on which members of the fair sex are admitted free to the games tends to boost gate receipts.

The only catch in the bargain proposition for next Sunday is that women, in order to be admitted to the ball park without charge, must be accompanied by male escorts—their husbands, fathers, male relatives or boy friends—it does not matter which to Jess so long as they bring male companions.

Providing fans turn out for the contest in goodly numbers, Manager Chambliss has the promise of the management of the Dayton team that Pitcher Lee, the latest addition to the St. Adalberts hurling staff, will be assigned to pitch the game for the visitors, Lee just recently joined the team, previously having pitched for a St. Louis club in the Missouri League.

The promise that Lee will pitch for St. Adalberts, coupled with the fact "Ladies' Day" should induce many, feminine fans to see the game gratis, indicates to the manager of the Merchants that a record-breaking crowd will be on hand next Sunday.

This department has again experienced the good fortune to receive a letter, which is an all too rare occurrence believe you. The missive revives the proposal of an elimination series to decide the 1931 semi-pro baseball title in Greene County. Here, before we ramble on too long and forget it, is the letter:

Attention: Sporting Editor:
Dear Sir:
"Having read in your column a statement that the Greene County title is at stake, I feel that it is not fair unless all teams in the county have a meet or an elimination series in which all teams of the county might enter."

"Osborn and Xenia have not crossed bats for six years and last year Osborn did everything but bribe Jess Chambliss to have his team play even went so far as to offer to play winner so far as the Manager Chambliss said that his season was over. Nevertheless Xenia played three more games. "Perhaps Jess knew something. Osborn was defeated by Yellow Springs, 7 to 6, in fourteen innings at Yellow Springs, with square of batting Jamestown also defeated, but Osborn considered them fish away from their diamonds. But after all, the attempts to play at Xenia failed, Osborn did not waste time trying to appear at Xenia."

"This year our attention has been called to the fact Jess is playing for a county title. Come on, Jess, after you take two from Jamestown let the rest of us hear from YOU."

Yours for sport,
W. E. GROTH,
Mgr. of Fulton Fords, Osborn.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifteenth of a series of instructive golf articles written by Mrs. Glenna Collett Vane, national champion and America's best known woman golfer, for Central Press Association and The Gazette.

Number 15
WE HEAR a lot about the correct follow through in golf, yet I have learned that the follow through is not a result of what happens previous to that act.

Its proper outcome depends entirely on what has preceded it. If correct, the follow through is the swinging of the clubhead, through the ball from inside the clubhead following low and close to the ground before and after contact. This last is due to the left arm having taken it back, and the right having added impetus from the halfway mark of the downswing.

The force of the swing eventually will pull the hands around to the left as they go up toward the left shoulder, and on coming through will cause the body of the player to face the hole.

To me, this is what finishes the golf swing with the correct follow through.

Should you pause at the top of your backswing? This question bothers many girls beginning the game. In my next article I will discuss this point.

DEFEAT CENTRAL TO

Central High School faded out of the American League championship softball picture at Cox Field Tuesday night.

After beating Krippendorf four out of five times previously this season, the Bucs were not equal to the task of doing it again and lost to the defending league champions by a count of 7 to 1.

As a consequence, Krippendorf moved up into a tie with the All-Stars for the league leadership with the prospect that the co-leaders of the loop may have to play a post-season game to decide the league title.

The All-Stars have two more games to play, one with Central High and the other with St. Bridget. Krippendorf must play the parochial school a regulation nine-inning contest and also the last two innings of a protested game.

Krippendorf exhibited true championship form against its jinx opponent Tuesday night. Bob Luttrell, winning pitcher, parted with only four hits while his mates were cuffing Storer for a dozen bingles.

Glass, Central first baseman, who arrived late for the game, scored the solitary Buccoaner run in the sixth after he had led off with a single.

Krippendorf staged a four-run rally in the second on a single by Ernst, home run by Pitcher Luttrell, singles by Gutlice and Jones and a double by Snell. Luttrell's second hit, a triple, followed by a fly produced another run in the fourth and the league champs added a marker in the seventh and also the eighth, three hits being grouped in each stanza. Ernst, shortstop, hit safely three times for the winners.

The Downowners and the Graham Paints, who usually stage hotly contested games, will be at it again Wednesday night. Lineups:

SHADE TREES

IN SPRINKLING lawns give a thought to the moisture needs of the shade trees, suggest horticulturists of the bureau of plant industry. Often, in the case of trees on the home grounds, water is as important as plants food. Ordinarily all of a moderate sprinkling will be absorbed by the grass, and a copious watering is required to reach the roots of the trees.

With large trees it is sometimes helpful in very dry weather to make holes eighteen inches deep with a crowbar, and water liberally in these holes.

Trees standing in a lawn near a garden plot if the branches of the latter extend over the garden, it is likely that the tree's roots spread into the garden soil and get nourishment from the fertilizer put on the flowers or vegetables. Trees standing in the lawn, however, may be starving. Many lawns have not plant food enough for either the grass or the trees.

In this case the gardener should see to the feeding of his trees. He should give special attention, also, to trees whose feeding area is partly covered with walks or drives.

Fertilizers that help trees also stimulate grass. Nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia are special stimulants. Cottonseed meal, ground bone, tankage and dried blood are good for slower acting. Nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia is used at the rate of one pound to 800 square feet of surface at monthly intervals from May 1 to August 1, but no later. The other materials may be used up to one pound to ten or twenty square feet anytime. Late fall or early spring is the usual application.

Do not apply lime. Most forest trees prefer acid soil. Large trees on stiff soil may be fed by putting the fertilizer in crowbar holes and watering copiously. Although this treatment is in the experimental stage, it seems to be giving good results.

STATE GAME COUNCIL ABANDONS
PLANS TO PROPOGATE BIG GAME

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 19.—Blasting one of the fondest dreams of Ohio sportsmen, conservation officials today admitted that years of work spent on the 9,000-acre Roosevelt game preserve in Scioto County, in an attempt to reconstruct the early American wilderness, may have been wasted.

For the first time since the opening gesture to rebuild the frontier was made, during the administration of former Governor Harry L. Davis, officials today confessed that they were "uncertain" about Ohio's fitness to propagate big game.

Sportsmen's hopes that the tract may some day be stocked with great herds of deer were given a set-back with the announcement that the state conservation council has decided, temporarily at least, to "retrench" at the Roosevelt preserve.

The first display of the council's uncertainty about the wisdom of proceeding to encourage wild life in an intensive manner was its recent decision to abolish the position of supervisor at the Roosevelt preserve, which was held by John Brown, International News Service was informed by A. F. Moon of Conover, chairman of the conservation council.

Brown's position was vacated and the council decided to supplant Brown with one of the game protectors residing in that area.

The game protector selected, it was ordered, will supervise the wild game propagation in addition to his other duties, indicating the council no longer regarded the intensive encouragement of big game as important as it was previously considered.

"Some authorities on big game propagation believe it is futile to spend more money on the project, holding that Ohio is not fitted to be a home of wild animals," Chairman Moon said.

"For one thing," he said, "some expert sportsmen believe deer and other animals find 9,000 acres too small a playground. For them such a tract really constitutes 'cramped quarters,'" he said.

Answering this argument, some sportsmen contend that the present tract ought to be sold, and the money used to lease it, and more extensive acreage, in an attempt to give deer all the space they need, according to Moon.

"Some sportsmen in that section would be glad to see wild game propagation plans abandoned, because it would give them room to hunt," he added.

Damage done by roaming deer also has given council members some worry. Claims against the state were turned into the sundry claims board during the session of the last legislature, asking payment for damage caused by deer which left customary haunts.

Moon said the problem is a weighty one which has not been solved. Long study and consideration will be given to the subject before a definite decision is reached deciding whether further encouragement of big game is futile, he asserted.

Chief of the Xenia police department since March 20, 1930, whom you may or may not recognize in his natty new uniform.

Born in Columbus July 16, 1893, he was educated in Central High School there and then became a journeyman electrician. He joined Machine Gun Co., Fourth Ohio Infantry, February 28, 1910 and has since enjoyed a high record of military service.

Cornwell saw service on the Mexican border in 1916 and during the late war served two years in France with the crack Rainbow Division, being wounded three times by shell fragments.

After being identified for eighteen months with the police force at his former home in Marion, O., he came to Xenia in 1925 as a military instructor at the O. S. and O. H. Home. Resigning this position, he served for eighteen months as a deputy sheriff assigned to the duties of county road patrolman. Then he resigned and returned to his old position at the Home for a year.

Cornwell, standing highest in a civil service examination, was appointed police chief March 20, 1930, succeeding M. E. Graham, who has since retired on pension.

During the brief space of a year and a half he has almost entirely revolutionized the methods of crime detection on the department.

Until a few months ago, when he resigned as commander of Company L, Xenia unit of the Ohio National Guard, Cornwell had been identified with the National Guard for twenty-one years. He joined the local company January 16, 1926 as a second lieutenant from Company D, 168th Infantry at Marion, and was made a first lieutenant July 15, 1926. In this capacity he assumed command of the unit December 26, 1926 and on February 2, 1927 was elevated to the rank of captain.

The police chief is married and is the father of three children, two boys and a girl. He is 38 years of age.

CYCLIST HURT WHEN

Harold Pierce, 20, near Bellbrook, is confined in Miami Valley Hospital, Dayton, suffering from a fracture at the base of the skull and other head injuries received in an accident near Bellbrook early Wednesday morning.

Pierce, who is the son of Elmo Pierce, Waynesville - Bellbrook Road, was on his way to work at the Frigidaire Corp., Dayton, when the accident occurred. He was riding on a motorcycle and was thrown when the machine struck gravel. The accident occurred in front of the home of Perry Sackett, two miles south of Bellbrook. Pierce was taken into the Sackett home and Dr. A. N. Vandeman was called. He was later removed to the Dayton hospital in a Ralph M. Neel ambulance.

LANGS SUCCUMB TO PITCHING OF
"RED" MEDER OF ST. PAUL TEAM

That helpless feeling at bat was experienced by the Lang Chevrolets, 1930 city champs, as they were blanked by St. Paul Lutheran of Springfield, 10 to 0 in a seven-inning softball argument on the Y. M. C. A. diamond at Springfield Tuesday night.

"Red" Meder, the speed ball pitcher who held the slugger Eddie Hour Club to two hits here the preceding evening, again presided on the mound for the Lutherans against the Chevrolets, and that explains everything.

Their lineup augmented by four players affiliated with other Xenia softball teams, the Chevrolets likewise succumbed to the redhead's fast ball. Meder struck out thirteen batters and allowed only two hits, both of which were scratch blows.

The famous St. Paul hurler fanned every player on the Xenia team except Pitcher Harry Williams at least once and he whiffed four batters twice. After the first two batters had fanned ingloriously, Williams hit safely over first base in the third inning but was forced at second. In the fourth, with one batter out on strikes, Lansford hit a pop infield single, after which Ruse hit into a double play. Two other Xenia players reached base on walks and another on an error.

Williams, pitching for Langs, was combed for thirteen hits. "The St. Paul team, in scoring its twenty-eighth victory in twenty-nine games this season, tallied three runs in the initial round, five more in the fourth and two in the sixth. Maxton, left fielder, hit two homers and a single for St. Paul, while Swan contributed a brace of doubles and a single, Cooney a triple and two singles and Brannigan a double and a pair of ordinary hits.

Carlton Lansford, "Skipper" Finlay, Fred McCurran and Marvin Putnam were the four non-Lang players who played with the Chevrolets. What a life. Lineups:

National Farm Outlook

By ARTHUR H. JENKINS Editor, The Farm Journal Written for Central Press Sadder days for bugs are looming. There are just three of them that may be called the standard poisons for insects. The first is arsenic in some form which is used where the insect we are after can be made to eat it, and thus develop acute stomach trouble. In this class are arsenate of lead, paris green, sodium arsenate, calcium arsenate and several others.

But some insects don't eat or chew, and these have to be fought with some poison which kills on contact. The standard poisons for these pests are nicotine and pyrethrum, one made from tobacco and the other from two varieties of the chrysanthemum flower.

Of course our friends the scientists and research men are always looking for something new and better, and in this field of insect poisons they think they have some called rotenone. This seems to have the desirable characteristics of killing insects in both ways—it kills if it touches and it kills if they eat it.

The chief trouble with rotenone is that it comes from the root of a tropical plant, and it is not easy to get together enough of it to sell commercially at a competitive price. A bug-killer that costs too much is not much better than the old reliable method of putting the insect on one brick and hitting him with another.

However, this difficulty is pretty certain to be got over, as most difficulties can be. The scientists are looking for other plants whose roots produce the poison, they are planning to grow the tropical plants nearer home, and finally they are trying to make the poison synthetically, which would be the best of all if they could manage it.

Rotenone has the further advantage that it is death to insects, and has a paralyzing effect on fish, but does not seem to affect animals or fowls. An apple pretty well coated with the stuff can be eaten without damage, which is more than can be said of the arsenic preparations we have been using to protect our fruit.

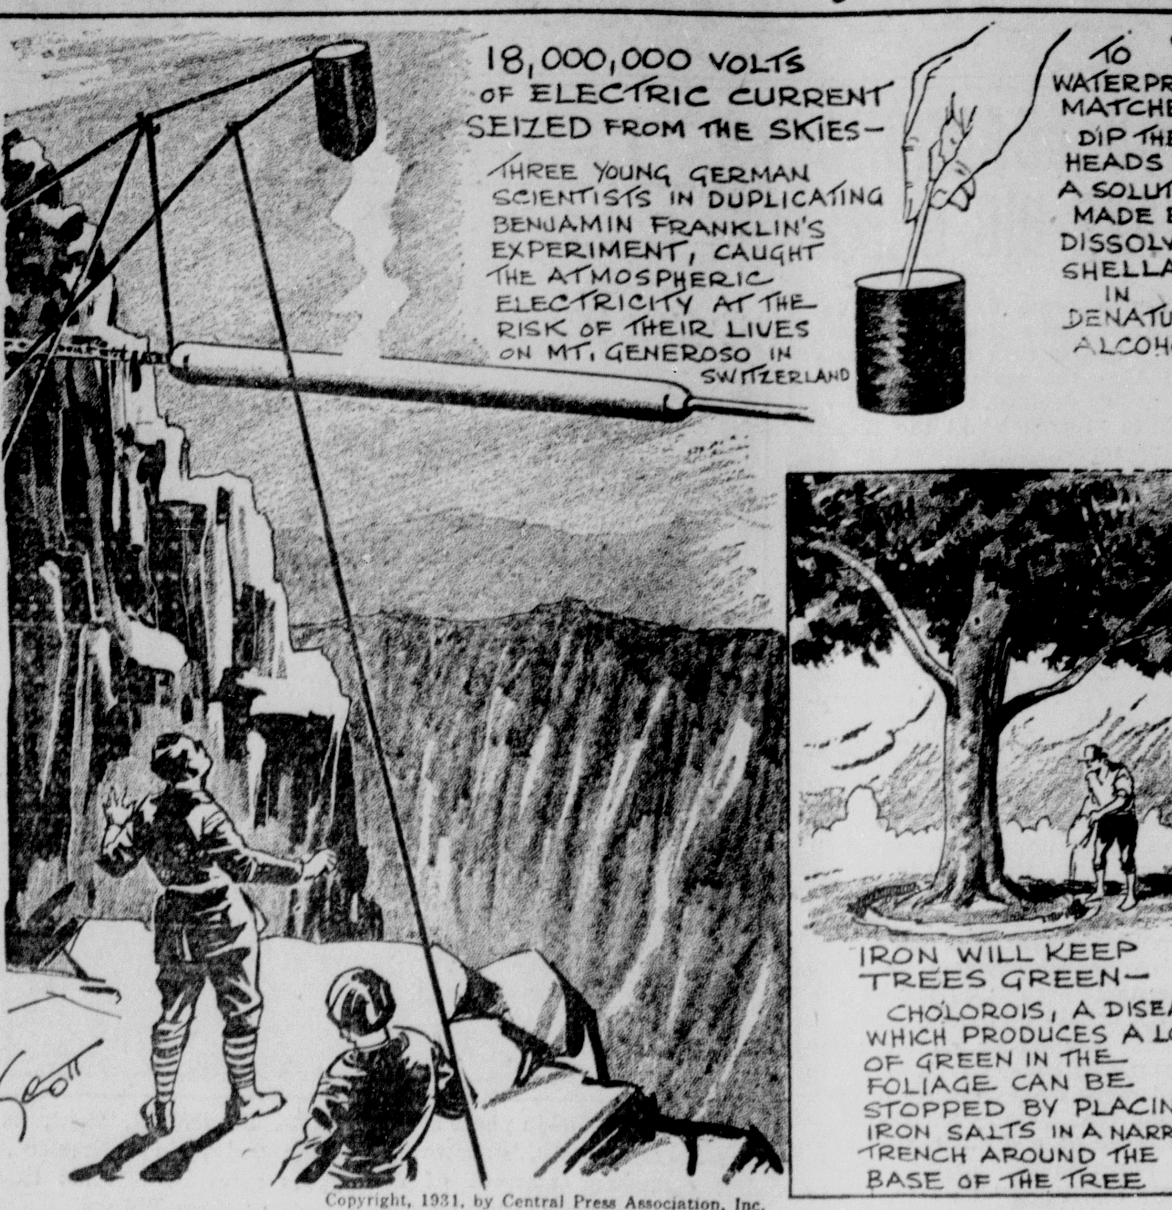

Altogether, if we can get enough rotenone cheaply enough, it looks as if this found in the endless fight against the insect tribe can be awarded to Battling Homo Sapiens.

Worn 'Em 73 Years

A record of old and faithful service which would make any manufacturer turn green with envy is pictured here on the 93-year-old feet of Jacob Miller, aged resident of Pleasant Hill, Mo. It's the boots you know, that we're talking about. Mr. Miller bought them at Millersburg, Pa., in 1858 and has worn them for 73 years. They still have the original heels and soles.

BRINGING UP FATHER

BROADWAY BRIDE By ETHELDA BEDFORD, Author of "DEAR DIARY"

READ THIS FIRST: Nita and Natalie Dudley, orphaned sisters, leave their home town, Truesdale, for New York where they hope to make a start on money Nita has borrowed from Natalie's former employer, Richard Marlow. Nita, first meeting with failure everywhere, becomes a night club entertainer through the friendship of Charles Young, a good-looking theatrical agent, whom the two girls met on the train. Natalie is unable to find a job and lives on what her sister gives her. At the night club Nita meets Alvin Brady, Manhattan playboy, who falls in love with her immediately, taking her out every night and showering her with attention. Nita leads him on, while Natalie, who has fallen in love with him secretly, hates her sister for her treatment of the young millionaire. Nita breaks a date with Alvin and when later, he finds her at the club dancing with Charles, he approaches them and unable to contain himself, knocks Charles under a table. Nita is rushed from the club by Anthony Widdles, the proprietor, and he cautions her not to talk to reporters about the fight. She senses the publicity value in it for her and immediately phones a tabloid newspaper. Her face beams from the front pages the next day.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER 14

"I KNEW IT! I knew it!" Nita cried, stomping her foot in its snubbed kid sandal. "He said just to tell you that you needn't come to the Gardens tonight. Like that—and hung up." Natalie repeated. "Didn't he even ask to talk to me?" Nita seemed surprised. "Not after I told him you were out. You said you were, even if Mr. Ziegfeld called."

"Oh, well . . . I mean it. Did he sound much in a huff, Natalie?" "No . . . not considering he was firing you."

"That part won't worry me . . . I guess I can get a better job at the Golden Sandal. I guess that wouldn't help Anthony Widdles' blood pressure," she sat on the side of the couch, slipping a robe on.

"I guess Anthony thinks I played a mean trick—grabbing off a bit of publicity for myself," she reached for the green tabloid lying on the coffee table.

"Whoop-pee!" she cried gleefully, dancing about the room, rustling and waving the newspaper over her head. "I wouldn't take a thousand dollars—cash for this!"

Her round face smiled from the very front page . . . the tabloid whose publisher owed his success to the steady policy of adhering to the slogan "All the news that is fit to print." He printed them in the name of art, of course.

Nita had her knees crossed, and with one shoulder strap of the chiffon gown hanging over her arm effectively, showing it had been broken.

The caption beneath the picture read: "Don't think Nita Dudley, little song bird who nests on the Palace Gardens' piano, is the kind of girl who lets her shoulder strap slip on purpose—see story on Page 2 of how a millionaire fought over her last night."

While the story on page three told how "frightened pretty little Nita" had been when the rich playboy, in a jealous mania, sent her dancing partner and agent, crashing to the floor the photograph accompanying the inside page story showed Nita smiling and showing her teeth like a girl in a dental paste advertisement.

In still another pose Nita was pulling her sophisticated trick, tilting her chin as high as it would go, cryptic Mona Lisa smile hovering provocatively about her well-rounded lips. She regarded the public through half closed lids.

"Millionaire playboy plays too roughly," said the caption. "Nita Dudley received a broken shoulder strap and a torn frock when Alvin Brady, wealthy playboy, got rough and rowdy," the story followed.

"There has been a rumor going about that the wealthy young man has been carting orchids to her door ever since the first night she climbed to the top of the Gardens' piano and moaned something about Memphis' Blues . . ."

"Charles Young, her agent, did the moaning last night after a mean kick to his left jaw, dealt by young Brady."

"Brady fell for Nita, but Charles fell for Brady . . . with a crash that put the merry-mad crowd at the Gardens into a frenzy."

The ring of the telephone interrupted Nita's reading aloud the stories for the third time. "Still out?"

"Even if it's Mr. Ziegfeld himself," Natalie finished the sentence for her.

"Really—I am expecting Zizzy to call."

"Say's he's Tom Dunne, the reporter you met last night," Natalie informed Nita.

Nita took the telephone quickly and said in her cheerfulness: "Hello there, big pencil and paper man!" She thought that quite New Yorkish. She smiled as she listened to his answer.

"Sure—love to have you come up to my place," she said. "No, I haven't the ingredients, but—oh, you'll bring them. Fine."

Nita juggled a cocktail shaker and aped extreme sophistication.

It was hard for Natalie not to believe she had had considerable practice. And you could tell by the way her visitor accepted the bright liquid she slipped into the little crystal glasses with gold rims—she had bought the shaker and the glasses in a hurry that morning at Wannamaker's—that he thought she was a connoisseur both in mixing and tasting.

"A hair of your pet doggie," said Nita, as she handed a brimming glass to New York's best-looking tabloid reporter—Tom Dunne.

"Just what I need to clear away the old hangover," he answered as he took the glass, not bothering to raise himself from his comfortable position in the arm chair.

"Pardon my low brow, won't you?" he said in a bored voice, but perhaps you were supposed to construe that his apology for not rising.

"Here's how—if you don't know how!" he said, and he emptied the glass at a gulp.

"Come again?" he held out his glass.

"Down the same trail," she answered, filling the glass again.

"Say, when you walked into the office last night," he said, leaning a little forward in his chair, "I said, 'there's the bit of honey you've been living these twenty-seven years to find.' Did you think I was sort of dazed when the editor told me to write your story?"

"Far from that," answered Nita, looking into his eyes.

He took that as an encouragement. Nita seated herself on the couch, across from him, making a mental note she would be especially managed to play her up in his paper.

"You're not drinking?" he seemed surprised.

"No—strange as it may seem," she smiled, but poured some in a glass because he seemed so perturbed. She only played at sipping it because Nita had an idea. And Nita Dudley wasn't the kind to fumble any chances like this one.

She was glad she had worn her new black satin lounging pajamas, with their trailing, pleated legs. The satin rivaled her hair with its gloss. Her face was like a cameo in an ebony frame.

"Say, I wrote a half column more about you but they didn't have room to use it," Tom announced.

"Really?"

"How did you like that line 'piano sitting song bird'?" he wanted to know.

"Fine," not very enthusiastically as she remembered she had coined it herself.

"You really liked my story then?" the shiny-eyed reporter asked, mellowed by the concoction. He wanted to hear her praise his work.

But she didn't smile. Her face became a little sad. Her painted lips pouted. Her lashes lay on her cheeks.

"But—it made Anthony Widdles fire me," she said in a small, very-feminine voice.

"Oh, I say . . ." regretfully.

"As soon as he read the paper he called—said I need not come to the Gardens any more . . ." she said.

Tom thought her on the verge of tears and sat by her on the couch. They had both ignored Natalie during the whole time.

"Why, you're twice as valuable now, after the publicity," he was saying, patting her arm tenderly. Nita thought that, but she kept still.

"But he told me not to come down . . ."

"The prohibition boys are in town and he thinks after the story they're focusing on him. That's all I don't worry." He caught her hand and held it.

Playing for Tom Dunne's sympathy was a little scheme that worked as perfectly as Nita had dared to hope.

"Say, I'll see you get a job at the Golden Sandal if Anthony Widdles lets you go . . . you beautiful little honey . . . don't you worry about that story at all . . . at all."

"Why don't you write a story about Anthony firing me—because Alvin Brady had a fight because he's in love with me . . .?"

"Say, you know, that's a bully idea . . . I was just thinking of that . . . Nita's greed for publicity was just beginning."

May Try Capone

In reply to Alphonse "Scarface Al" Capone's plea that he be given a change of venue from the court of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson in Chicago, when he is tried on charges of defrauding Uncle Sam in income taxes, Federal Judge John F. Barnes (above) may hear the case. The notorious gangster charged his plea of guilty to not guilty and asked a change in judges when an expected leniency was not forthcoming.

The Theater

With her vacation just begun, Ann Harding isn't devoting many thoughts to pictures these days but the studio is still worrying about her next vehicle.

It may be a story called "Pres-tige" for which Johnny Farrow wrote the continuity. Ann's role would be the wife of a young diplomat who is given his first assignment in a penal colony in French Indo-China. The couple's struggle to resist the demoralizing influence of the climate and of their surroundings furnishes the drama. The star likes the story.

Mary Doran of the films is the bride of Joseph Sherman, publicity director. The ceremony was a quite one at San Diego and the bride and bridegroom departed on a honeymoon to Agua Caliente, Mexico.

When a new player really clicks in Hollywood, parts come in a rush. Peggy Shannon made good and now is starting her around with Ina and that gives him the inside track. Ames has given several fine performances and is already under contract to RKO.

Lupe Velez is lunching regularly these days with Lawrence Tibbett. Charlie Farrell has settled down no end since his marriage. His turned serious, worries about his pictures and all that. Marjorie White and Eddie Tierney have just celebrated their seventh wedding anniversary. Madge Bellamy and her mother are in Europe. Tom Mix Begins his first Universal Western October 15. Now he's been initiated, they can't keep Will Rogers out of a tuxedo. He's making his third dress-up picture.

FOUR BRING SUITS FOR DIVORCE HERE OTHER COURT NEWS

After more than thirty-four years of married life, Mrs. Nora D. Duellman who, with her daughter, Fay, operates Rest Haven Park, a camp situated on the Dayton-Xenia Pike, seeks a divorce from Louis W. Duellman on grounds of gross neglect of duty and extreme cruelty in a suit filed in Common Pleas Court.

Married in Dayton June 16, 1897, Mrs. Duellman declares that since 1912 she has been supporting herself and has helped support her husband who, she claims, spends most of his money on drinking.

She and her daughter, Mrs. Duellman sets forth in the petition, have lived at their camp on the Dayton Pike for the last seven years. Her husband, she claims, has contributed nothing toward the purchase price or the upkeep of the camp.

Requesting an injunction preventing her husband from molesting her, coming to the park and from withdrawing certain money, Mrs. Duellman asks to be awarded alimony and desires to have the defendant divested of any interest in their real estate in Montgomery County.

Suit for divorce from her third husband, Oliver Williamson, 1200 E. Main St., has been filed by Rebecca Williamson who, court records show, has already divorced two previous husbands. Charging gross neglect of duty and extreme cruelty, the plaintiff asserts her husband twice drew a gun and threatened to kill her.

Ethel Helm has instituted suit for divorce from George Helm, to whom she was married November 24, 1920. They have no children. The plaintiff claims she has been compelled to depend upon charity and her own labors to obtain food and clothing.

According to the court opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to a two-thirds share in the real estate and remainder of the defendants are to receive proportions ranging from 1-27th to 1-2,646th of the estate. Charles Harness, A. W. Tresise and S. M. McKay were named commissioners.

COSTS RECOVERED

The Greene County clerk of courts is entitled to recover costs of $60.04 in the case of the Realty Securities Corp. against Carrie J. Brownell, under terms of a court ruling.

COOPER DRAWN INTO HIGHWAY PROBE BUT DENIES SITE CHARGE

Former Governor Says "Politics" Did Not Influence Case

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 19.—Sputtering and sizzling like a firecracker, the state senate's investigation of the highway department reopened here today with the committee in possession of a flat denial that former Governor Myers Y. Cooper and his associates "played politics" in buying a site for a highway garage at Troy, O.

State Senator David P. Lorbach of Cincinnati, the Democratic leader of the probe, openly inferred at a hearing late yesterday that the purchase of a garage site and building from M. T. Dilts of Troy was a political transaction.

Former Governor Cooper and two of his cabinet members, former Finance Director Harry D. Silver and former Highway Director Robert N. Wald, were called to tell their own stories of the deal and explain a letter written to the former governor by a Troy attorney.

All testified "politics" had nothing to do with the purchase. A photostatic copy of a letter from Attorney F. C. Goodrich, urging the governor to use his influence to get the board of control to buy the Troy property, pointing out that it would be advantageous in his campaign for re-election, was produced at the hearing.

The $3,750 paid for the site and the building was excessive, Lorbach hinted to members of the committee during the questioning. Asserting that he remembered there had been some dispute between Dilts and the state board of control, Cooper said he had no recollection of receiving a letter from Goodrich.

Dilts personally testified that Cooper was "under no obligations to me." Reinforcing this testimony, Goodrich declared that citizens of Troy were criticizing the Cooper administration for its failure to act on the purchase of the site.

Silver also testified, adding to the denials that the transaction was "political."

He defended the board of control, of which he was chairman, for paying $1,100 as rental for the building, saying the board was "under moral obligation" to pay for the use of the property during the months while the deal was pending. He said the deal was a good one for the state.

Corroborating testimony also was given by Roscoe Bowman, Miami County road superintendent, and Walter Scott of Bellefontaine, former division engineer.

PAUL HERBERT WILL HEAD OHIO LEGION; CONVENTION ENDED

Toledo Chosen Next; Table Resolution On Prohibition

CLEVELAND, Aug. 19.—Legionnaires of Ohio returned to their everyday tasks today following a three-day sojourn to this city for the thirteenth annual convention of the state American Legion which closed yesterday with the election of officers and naming of Toledo as next year's meeting place after a table resolution on prohibition.

Paul Herbert, former state senator from Columbus and a charter member of Ohio's first legion post, Franklin No. 1, received unanimous vote of the delegates for state commander to succeed John A. Elden of Cleveland. Harry Gilligan of Cincinnati was re-elected state treasurer and Reverend E. J. Gracey of Cleveland was named state department chaplain in the only other election of the final session.

Previous to the election of officers, the delegates spent the entire morning battling over passage of two resolutions—one calling for modification or repeal of the 18th amendment and the other demanding disbanding of the legion heirs, a subsidiary group for sons of world war veterans.

The "dry" issue, brought before the convention this year for the first time, was tabled in a surprising climax of a bitter battle for adoption led by William E. Handley, former commander of Bentley Post, Cincinnati, author of the resolution. The resolution opposing the 18th amendment was defeated by a vote of 18 to 23.

Selecting the same convention city as the Legion, the women's auxiliary elected Mrs. J. Edward Johns of Massillon as state president before closing their convention which was held in conjunction with that of the Legion. Mrs. Lester M. Merritt, Columbus, defeated presidential candidate, was elected vice president.

District presidents named were: Mrs. Frank Neal, Lima, second district; Mrs. D. C. Warring, Norwalk, fourth district; Mrs. Harry Marsh, Columbus, sixth district; Mrs. Harry Thomas, Logan, eighth district and Mrs. O. C. McDowell, Orrville, tenth district.

SANGER GIVES REASONS FOR WITHDRAWAL

Candidate "Disgusted With Politics" Statement Says

Business reasons influenced Fred W. Sanger, E. Main St. butcher, to withdraw Tuesday from the race for City Commission after he had been nominated at the August 11 primary, he revealed Wednesday.

Sanger, one of four candidates scheduled to compete for two commission vacancies at the November election, declared his decision to retire from the race was due more than anything else to the fact he was "disgusted with politics."

The leading issue in the primary campaign involved the Xenia electric franchise controversy, but Sanger asserted he had remained entirely neutral on this subject. A report that he had identified himself with the group supporting the Citizens Public Service Co., a subsidiary of Fairbanks, Morse and Co., seeking the local electric light and power franchise, was emphatically denied by Sanger.

ALLOWED SERVICE BY PUBLICATION IN DEMPSEY DIVORCE

Estelle Restrains Jack From Getting Rid Of Assets

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 19.—Estelle Taylor today had secured a court order permitting service by publication upon Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight boxing champion on the ground that he is not a legal resident of California.

Fulfilling her earlier statements, Miss Taylor fought back at Dempsey's divorce suit filed at Reno Monday by filing one of her own here yesterday. In it she accused the fighter of extreme cruelty and in a statement outlined the differences encountered in arranging a property settlement.

Miss Taylor said she asked for $40,000 at the rate of $1,000 monthly but Dempsey blocked this plan when she demanded he guarantee the payments by putting up collateral.

Judge Haas granted the film actress a restraining order preventing Dempsey from disposing of a $200,000 trust fund and 100,000 shares of stock in a hotel. According to her affidavit the trust fund was composed of community funds.

PLANE FORCED DOWN OFF KETOI ISLAND; AWAIT FOG LIFTING

Crowd Disappointed When Ship Brought Down In Bay

TOKYO, Aug. 19.—Forced down by fog on their journey from Petropavlovsk, Kamchatka, to Nemuro, Japan, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh made themselves comfortable this evening in their swift plane and prepared to spend the night at Anchorage off the rocky coast of Ketoi Island in the Kurile group that stretches like a necklace from Siberia to Japan.

Hemmed in by a dense fog, the famous aviator and his courageous wife decided to remain where they were until sunlight blazes a clear path for them tomorrow, instead of risking disaster by taking off in the mist or attempting to taxi their plane to the rocky shore of the island.

News of their forced descent came as a keen blow to the population of Nemuro, a bustling little town on Hokkaido Island at the northern extremity of the Japanese empire, where the Lindberghs were scheduled to descend before reaching Tokyo, destination of their vacation trip into the Orient.

The descent of Ketoi Island was the second forced landing made by the Lindberghs after leaving Petropavlovsk at 10:45 a. m. (8:45 a. m. Tuesday, E. D. T.) shortly after the take-off, they were forced down in Avatchu bay by engine trouble, but the damage was quickly repaired and the journey resumed.

While in the air, Mrs. Lindbergh tapped out a radio message to the Japanese aeronautical authorities requesting permission to make a descent in the Kurile Islands if an emergency arose. This permission was granted immediately.

Roaring southward toward their goal, the Lindberghs pushed their plane into an almost impenetrable blanket of fog. They kept up the battle for several hours, anxious not to disappoint the thousands awaiting them at Nemuro, depending almost solely upon "blind" navigation to direct them to their goal.

They had covered about 350 miles of the distance separating the extreme southern tip of Kamchatka from Nemuro when they decided to make the descent. They brought their plane down easily on the waters of Buroton Bay, 200 meters (about 600 feet) off the coast of Ketoi, and Mrs. Lindbergh immediately radioed news of the landing to Japanese and American authorities.

The descent in Buroton Bay was made at 4:15 p. m. (3:15 a. m. E. D. T.). Even if the weather cleared speedily, the Lindberghs realized they could not possibly reach Nemuro until late in the evening and there seemed little hope that the fog would lift before morning.

The Japanese fishing trawler Shimusuru Maru, the nearest large vessel to the point of descent, put out toward the Lindbergh plane when news of the descent was received at its base. The ship was within three hours ordinary cruising distance of the plane, but the trip was expected to be slowed up considerably by the fog.

No anxiety was felt over Col. and Mrs. Lindbergh as the sea was calm and their plane was moored at a point outside of the regular steamer route through the Kuriles, thus eliminating the danger of a collision in the fog.

GIRL EXPLAINS OWN SUICIDE

Farewell Message Graven On Record For Family To Put On Phonograph

PATTERSON, N. J. Aug. 19.—The voice of a 23-year-old girl explains why she committed suicide here.

While police and members of the dead girl's family listened, the voice of Miss Nora Goldberg, 23, who killed herself by drinking poison was heard to issue from a sound reproducing machine.

Her message was: "Hello, my dear father and mother and sweet brother. I want to tell you how much I really love you, and how much I regret all the trouble I have caused you. But most of all I want to be sure from now on your lives will be happy. "Forgive me, and remember the good things I have done. Forget the rest. Set a good example for Henry (her brother), if you want him to be a good son and respect and honor you. Goodbye."

A note left by her bedside stated that she had left her farewell message in the record. Mrs. Goldberg said she believed the girl had killed herself as a result of over study.

OHIO LEGION CHOOSES NEW HEADS

Former State Senator Paul M. Herbert of Columbus, O., left, is the new state commander of the American Legion, chosen during the convention in Cleveland. Robert C. Weber, right, of Dayton, is the new grand chief de gare of the Societe des 40 Hommes et 8 Chevaux, social organization.

CAMPBELL ASKED TO CORRECT REPORT ON REQUEST FOR FUNDS

"Misquoted" Declares Finance Director In Columbus

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 19.—A request that Col. Milt D. Campbell, secretary of the board of trustees of the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, at Xenia, correct certain statements alleged to have been made by him at the American Legion convention at Cleveland Monday relative to the appropriation of state funds for the home had been made today by Finance Director Howard L. Bevis.

Campbell was said to have declared that when he phoned Bevis, urging the allotment of funds by the state control board for improvements at the Xenia Home, Bevis replied: "We have a lot of matters before us today. We may reach the Xenia matter tomorrow, if we have a session, but I doubt whether we will."

Bevis claimed that what he told Campbell was: "We have not taken the matter up yet, but will probably do so this afternoon. I will let you know."

Shortly after this conversation, Bevis said, the board authorized the expenditure of $160,000 for a new dining room and kitchen at the Home. The action of the board, according to Bevis, was taken before it received a telegram from Commander John A. Elden, of the American Legion of Ohio, declaring that "The American Legion, in convention assembled, unanimously demands action on the appropriation request of trustees of the O. S. and S. O. Home."

The convention authorized Elden to send the telegram after he urged the legion to assert its "political power to punish those who ignore its pleas for the proper care of the orphans," it was said.

The statement credited to Campbell by Bevis was also credited to Paul Fuller, commander of Footy Post, Xenia, in dispatches from Cleveland Tuesday.

Fuller, who returned to Xenia Tuesday night, said he had heard the conversation between Campbell and Bevis and that he believes action of the state board of control in releasing funds to provide a new building at the Home was due to the Legion intervention.

Fuller also revealed here copies of resolutions passed at the convention regarding the Home. One of these reiterates a previous suggestion to the trustees that "steps be taken so that in the very near future the children who become of high school age and prepared for high school may be sent to the public schools in Xenia."

TWO NEW YORK GUNMEN SLAIN

Defy Police Drives Against Crime

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Police drives against gangsters in New York were further defied today after two ex-convict bootleggers were shot to death virtually in the shadows of police headquarters. Three gunmen walking in "Little Italy" just before midnight recognized two of their rivals just ahead of them and opened fire, each gangster pulling out two pistols. In all thirty bullets were fired.

Joseph Cigna, 21, was shot seven times in the back and Anthony Justiano, 25, was shot three times in the back. Both of the victims were gunmen, gangsters and bootleggers, according to police.

The assassins fled and had completely disappeared when police took up the chase. A bootlegger fueled caused the double murder, authorities said. They claimed the victims were "small time" operators and were not connected with "big shot" New York gangs.

"Shooting Star"

"Believe it or not" (with apologies to Mr. Ripley), but this miss is actually photographed in Reno—and she's not there for a divorce. What's Reno coming to, anyhow? After getting a firmly entrenched reputation as a capital of divorce it becomes fickle and gets interested in the largest trap-shooting matches to be held in the West. And that's why Erma Deal (above) is doing some fancy practice shooting at targets, instead of aiming at a divorce.

BETHLEN CABINET RESIGNS TO REGENT

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Aug. 19.—The long rule of Count Stephen Bethlen, Hungary's sphinx-like prime minister, seemed at an end today when the cabinet tendered its resignation to Admiral Nicholas De Horthy, the regent.

The resignation was said to be due to the financial crisis which followed in the wake of German economic troubles and to French insistence that J. Gombos, minister of war, and Count Klebelsberg, minister of education, be ousted. It was expected here today that Admiral Horthy would call upon Count Julius Karolyi, minister of foreign affairs to form a new cabinet.

A situation like this, in a state like Pennsylvania, leads many to believe that the present emergency is as vital to the people as the "great war," the governor groans.

CONGRESS SESSION URGED BY PINCHOT

HARRISBURG, Aug. 19.—Gov. Gifford Pinchot today urged President Herbert Hoover to call a special session of congress to provide federal help for the unemployed. Copies of the letter to the President in which Gov. Pinchot outlined his stand were made public here.

The letter to the President was accompanied by a report on conditions as they now exist in Pennsylvania.

HEAVY PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO REPORT INTANGIBLE TAXES

Finance Institutions, Money Lenders Are Target Of Law

(Editor's Note: This is the eighth of a series of articles by International News Service, explaining new taxation laws adopted by the Ohio 89th General Assembly.)

By International News Service

Penalties of $100 a day await financial institutions and dealers in intangibles who fail to observe special provisions in the new Ohio personal property tax law.

Financial institutions will be held responsible for paying into the county treasury the taxes due on shares of stock held by their stockholders, and if they fail they are liable to the $100-a-day punishment, under terms of the law adopted by the 89th General Assembly.

All "dealers in intangibles," or persons running places of business for lending money, discounting, buying or selling bills of exchange or buying or selling bonds, stocks or other investment securities for profit, also can be forced to pay the $100-a-day penalty.

Dealers in intangibles also are to be required to collect the taxes due from the owners of shares of stock and turn them over to the county treasurer.

In both cases, some official of each firm must supply between the first and second Monday of March a complete list of the resources and liabilities as of Dec. 31, accompanied by a full statement of the names and addresses of the owners.

Besides the $100-a-day penalty, the financial institutions and dealers in intangibles also will be required to pay the regular amount due in taxes.

Imprisoned by Mistake? His Face His Misfortune

Owing to His Facial Resemblance to the Notorious "Two-Gun" Crowley, Patrick O'Brien Is Serving 20-Year Sentence for Crime He Claims Former Committed.

MRS. HELEN O'BRIEN and DAUGHTER EILEEN.

Picked out of the spectators in a court where he had gone to see the trial of a former school chum and charged with holding up a drug store, Patrick O'Brien, of New York, was sentenced to twenty years in prison, despite the protests of his mother that he was ill in bed with pleurisy when the crime was committed. Now Gerald Weed, former crime-partner of the notorious "Two-Gun" Crowley, who is awaiting execution for the murder of a policeman, has confessed that he and Crowley committed the crime for which O'Brien was sentenced. O'Brien bears a striking resemblance to the killer and, with his mother, is pleading for a reopening of his case on the grounds that he is the innocent victim of mistaken identity.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Somebody with a gift for seeing things as they really are once remarked that the law is like a cobweb, it catches the comparatively harmless fly, but the vicious wasp and hornet can easily break through it.

Never a day passes but the truth of the assertion is made, evident. The other day we had the case of a young New York girl being finger-printed and sent to jail for the heinous offense of letting the strap of her bathing suit slip while in the sacred precincts of Coney Island, while the gunmen who shot five children in New York's "Little Italy" were roaming the country free as air.

Right on top of this comes the case of Patrick O'Brien, who is now in Sing Sing Prison serving a twenty-year sentence. According to O'Brien and his mother, the only offense of which he is guilty is a remarkable resemblance to the notorious "Two-Gun" Crowley, convicted killer of a Nassau County policeman, and there seems reason to support their contention that a grave miscarriage of justice has been perpetrated on a boy who may be innocent.

The manner of O'Brien's conviction for a crime which he avers he did not commit throws an interesting light upon the manner in which the law put the indelible brand of felony upon its victim in what, his supporters say, was flimsy circumstantial evidence.

One day last spring, O'Brien, who is now 19, read that a boy with whom he had gone to school had been arrested. Interested, he visited the court where his school chum was on trial and sat among a hundred or so other spectators. Now, it happened that the police had placed a number of hold-up suspects in different parts of the court room so that they could be identified by their victims, so young O'Brien had inadvertently stepped right into an impromptu lineup.

The boy's feelings can better be imagined than described when a man halted before him and exclaimed: "That's the fellow that robbed my drug store—he and two others."

O'Brien was arrested and indicted. At his trial his mother, Mrs. Nellie O'Brien, testified that her son had been at home in bed with pleurisy at the time that the robbery was committed. January 16 but she could produce no witnesses to corroborate her testimony. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation for leniency, but the judge sentenced the lad to twenty years in prison.

Now comes a confession by a former partner of "Two-Gun" Crowley, Gerald Weed, also in Sing Sing paying his debt to society, that he and Crowley were responsible for the crime for which O'Brien is in jail. It was only on Weed's confession that O'Brien's unfortunate likeness to the notorious gunman was noted.

A movement is on foot to reopen the case now, but if the law says "so sorry, I've made a mistake" it will be poor consolation for those of us who had the misfortune to be ushered into the world bearing a resemblance to a "public enemy."

Crowley, who is in the death house awaiting execution, refused either to affirm or deny the statements of his former associate, Weed, dismissing the subject with the nonchalant observation that he took part in so many hold-ups that he could not recollect a specific one.

However, there is one cheering aspect of the unfortunate business. Young O'Brien may consider himself lucky that he was not also saddled with the crime for which Crowley is now toiling the line that marks the starting point for his final parade on earth — The last mile.

FLYNN BLDG. TO BE REMODELED; JOHNSON BARBER SHOP TO MOVE

Plans for the removal of his barber shop and beauty parlor to a new location at 120 S. Detroit St. in a building owned by P. H. Flynn were announced Wednesday by Melvin S. Johnson.

The Johnson Barber Shop is at present located on the ground floor at 38 S. Detroit St. in a building also owned by Mr. Flynn and for the last five years Mr. Johnson has also operated a beauty shop on the second floor in connection with his business.

Contemplated remodeling of the entire building by the owner has made it necessary for the barber shop and beauty parlor to be transferred to a new location.

The room at 120 S. Detroit St. has been unoccupied for several years. It was used as the office of the Ohio Fuel Supply Co. until the company merged with the Dayton Power and Light Co. and the two offices were consolidated. Afterward it was used for storage purposes until the company's lease expired last January 1.

In preparation for occupancy by Mr. Johnson, interior of the room is being completely remodeled, work which will be completed in about three weeks. The space has a frontage of twenty-one feet and a depth of seventy-three feet and the room will be repainted, repaired and plastered.

Plans call for using a space fifteen by twenty-two feet in the front for the barber shop. This will be partitioned off allowing space for a four-foot hallway extending for twenty-two feet from the front entrance. Two doors will be built, one leading to the barber shop and the other to the hall. Directly in the rear of the barber shop a space twenty-one by twenty-eight feet will be converted into a beauty parlor to be operated by Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. Three booths will be installed along one side. In the rear of the room the remaining space, also separated by a partition, will be furnished as an apartment for the proprietor, the suite including a bedroom, kitchen, bathroom, closet, pantry and breakfast room. The location at 38 S. Detroit St.

Nevitt, who suffered severe injuries about the head, sets forth in the petition that he was riding in an auto driven by his brother, Sewell, and also occupied by a third Xenian, Homer Hicks. The three occupants were injured, all painfully.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be trodden down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill.—Isaiah, xxv, 10.

THE CHILD AND HIS MONEY

A bulletin recently prepared by the United States Children's Bureau suggests the following relative to a child's use of money:

1. Give the child a regular fixed allowance; teach him not to beg and tease for additional money.
2. Let him learn by experience that denial must follow extravagance.
3. Teach the child not to expect pay for duties he ought to perform.
4. Encourage him to earn extra money by giving him a real job, preferably one which has real commercial value; pay him no more and no less than it is worth.
5. Be sure any work he does outside the home is not physically harmful and does not expose him to wrong influences.
6. Don't tip the child for rendering small services or for being good or polite.
7. Teach the child the value of saving for a definite purpose instead of for the mere sake of saving; let him learn the folly of spending all his money at once and going into debt to buy something he wants.
8. Teach him that saving things that cost money is as important as saving money.
9. Help the child realize the importance of giving as well as of spending and saving.
10. Remember that the example of financial responsibility parents set will influence the child's attitude.

OUR UNEMPLOYED

The conduct of the unemployed in this country during the current depression has afforded an agreeable contrast to that of the unemployed in certain other countries. Agitators have been among them, attempting to arouse class feeling. A few parades have been organized, which might have been staged in more prosperous times, as a small discontented element is always with us; and that is all the soapboxers have succeeded in doing.

The credit for this condition is due partly to sane leadership of organized labor and partly to the evident disposition of employers to go as far as they can to aid their workers; but in greatest part of all, it is due to the intelligence and conservatism of the rank and file of American working people. They are too wise to wreck the machine that has brought them thus far just because it is having some difficulty with this particular stretch of road. They are far wiser in this connection than some of the men who have been using their political prominence to broadcast the seeds of discontent with things as they are.

Complacency does not necessarily imply indifference. The points at which our industrial system has not yet perfectly adjusted itself to new conditions have not passed unnoticed by the working class; but as a class, American workers have shown a willingness to wait patiently for that adjustment, which must ultimately be made for the benefit of all concerned. The loyalty they have displayed to the existing order has been impregnable to radical agitation and will remain one of the consolations of the depression.

FLIERS IN TROUBLE

Clyde Pangborn and Hugh Herndon, Jr., got themselves into a peck of trouble when they flew over fortified areas in Japan with a camera in their plane. The Japanese authorities charged them with violation of the espionage law and fined them approximately $1,000 each.

Acting Secretary of State Castle has officially denied that the fliers were acting for the American government, when they are alleged to have photographed forbidden territory; but even that may not absolve them in the eyes of the Japanese government. They have been, although we do not assume that they were, acting in the interest of some other government or taking pictures that might come into the hands of other governments. The Japanese authorities have a right to place that interpretation on their ill-advised action.

The point is that American fliers over foreign countries are guests of those countries, as much as if they had crossed the boundary in an automobile or a railway train. Stringent regulations have been adopted in many air-traveled countries to protect them against smuggling and spying. Soar as high as he can, above the present altitude record, an aviator is never above the laws of the country over which he is flying, as he will find out if he is forced to land on its soil. The Pangborn-Herndon incident proves that.

DON'T LIKE IT

An irate daughter of the state which J. Thomas Heflin once represented in the senate sends the New York Times a violent protest against calling his former constituents "Alabamians." They don't like the name. They are "Alabamians." As she is president of the "Alabamians in New York" she ought to know what's what.

The point is well taken. When the people of a state prize their proper appellation so highly that they "see red" at being misnamed, their wishes should be respected. Arkansians pronounce the name of their state as if it were spelled "Arkansaw." That's their privilege. Well informed persons everywhere follow their orthoepic dictum. Similarly, anyone who hereafter calls Alabamians anything but Alabamians—except in anger—will be judged guilty of ignorance or of gross negligence with the sensibilities of a great commonwealth.

It appears that on Long Island many midget golf courses are being turned into archery fields. Here many of them are just running to grass.

Kansas is a great state with lots of wide open spaces and all that. Why is there something always the matter with it?

MY NEW YORK

—BY JAMES ASWELL—

NEW YORK.—No native New Yorker ever has a very clear perception of his city. He is too close to it. Columnists born here always fill me with awe for their intrepidity, because for a born-and-bred Manhattanite to attempt to write about his health with perspective and objectivity would seem as daring a performance as the operation by a surgeon upon a member of his own family.

Even for one hailing from a community as far away as Natchitoches, Louisiana (my home town), there are certain mental hazards in a daily examination of the fauna and flora of this astonishing preserve. Yesterday I was frightened by a purely psychic bugaboo.

Peering from a taxi window just off Broadway I noticed a new side-show for the Times Square circus. Around a hastily erected proscenium was a flaming red banner proclaiming:

"MUSEE NAPOLEON—Napoleon and Josephine. Peace or War?" That was all—except the admission price, children 15c, adults 25c. What worried me was the fact that I didn't shout to the driver to pull up at the curb as I fumbled for my quarter. For an hour I gloomed because of the thought that had flashed through my head at sight of the Musee Napoleon: "Humph! Another racket for suckers!"

And that, I submit, is no attitude to brag about. It is no fun. Only suckers, after all, have much fun; and a year ago I'd have fallen for that poster like a shot. Was it come to pass that I was joining the know-it-all fraternity, the anti-wide-eyes, the tired old men of Manhattan? The symptom was dismaying.

Resulting, I have decided that I must get out of New York for a spell—and quickly. When simple little amusement shell games fall to panic me at sight, I should do something about it in a big way. I shall take a flying trip to Europe, maybe that should be an excellent tonic for Manhattanitis.

A brief trip, because if you stay away from New York more than a few weeks you miss new plays, new contentions in the celebrity arena, new side-shows like the Musee Napoleon, new and fascinating skin-games for depriving you of loose change and boredom. I shall probably take the Leviathan, too; aboard that mammoth craft the atmosphere is much like New York, what with New Yorkers aboard and the "biggest boat in the world" ballyhoo. . . . For reading matter I think I'll take a good guide-book to the town.

WITH A FAST CAMERA

All the books on the shelves in the public reception room at the Columbia Broadcasting System are in foreign languages, so visitors won't steal them.

For the first time in 20 years there is no "Theodore of the Ritz-Carlton." The most famous of New York's millionaires, the Ritz-Carlton, the Ritz-Carlton, is in France selecting the wine list of a new hotel that will be built in Bermuda. He will devote a year to assembling a "cellar." Of the old guard of New York's millionaires remain: Oscar Tschirky, soon to be in the New Waldorf-Astoria; Rene Black at the Central Park Casino; Charlie Journal, in a night club; the other and lesser known Theodore, named Savars, at the Ritz Tower.

Did you hear about the man who sent his mother-in-law a telegram on her birthday, choosing an appropriate message from the printed suggestion provided by the telegraph company, and got the wrong number? She received a message of condolence.

ON THEWING!

GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE WILL BE EVEN WORSE IN 1932, SAYS EXPERT

—CHARLES F. STEWART—

WASHINGTON — "Grasshoppers," predicts W. R. Walton, cereal and forage insect investigator-in-chief of the agriculture department's bureau of entomology, "probably will be worse next year than they have been this season."

"It has been a fine summer for the orthoptera family—because dry, in the region where it is naturally most prolific."

"Destroying the creatures' eggs by fall plowing, is a wise precautionary measure, if practicable—which is not, however, throughout much of the northwest. The soil is too sandy; disturbed in the autumn, winter wind would be likely to blow it away. Besides, mother grasshoppers are clever at finding safe places to hide their eggs."

"A wet winter and spring," observed Entomologist Walton, "may cut down the pest's proportions, for the tribe does not thrive on moisture, but relief in that form cannot be depended on; the grasshopper-infested area is normally a dryish one, in the main."

"The orthoptera have parasites, too, and as the orthoptera multiply, so do the parasites. Thus through the parasites' ravages, the hoppers ultimately will be largely wiped out, though not completely; no parasite ever entirely exhausts its food supply. Unfortunately, next season is too soon to expect the present grasshopper plague to be materially modified by parasitic influences. By the season of 1933 they doubtless will have begun to produce substantial effects."

"All indications are that the farmers will have their own battle to fight in 1932."

"Once hatched out, grasshoppers yield most surely," continued the entomological expert, "to poison."

"To some extent a traveling, horse-drawn trap known as a 'hopperdozer' is employed against them. Under just the right conditions it has proved tolerably effective, pleasure in discovering them in others. . . . It is our own price that blames our neighbor's price. . . . We are never as happy or as unhappy as we think we are. . . . We should be more ashamed to distrust our friends than to be deceived by them. . . . Every one blames his memory, no one his judgment. . . . Many a marriage is happy, none is ideal."

Many would never have fallen in love, had they never heard the term. . . . No one hesitates to praise his heart, yet who dares laud his mind? . . . We admit our faults that our sincerity may redeem our reputations. . . . Hypocrisy is a tribute vice pays to virtue. . . . Excessive zeal in discharging an obligation is a form of ingratitude. . . . Devoting one's life to keeping well is one of the most tedious of ailments. . . . Some wicked people would be less dangerous had they no redeeming qualities. . . . The enthusiasm of youth is no more harmful than the indifference of age. . . . It is easier to know mankind than any man. . . . No one deems himself at every point inferior to the man he most admires. . . . Old age is a tyrant that, under penalty of death, forbids all the pleasures of youth."

Many men and women have thoughts as sharp and true as these, but do not put them into words. One of George Ade's family once said, "George does not know any more than the rest of us, but he writes it down."

considered the great-great grandfather of insects. They run the cockroach a close race, anyway—and, indeed, are closely related to him."

"Why, there is a glacier in Yellowstone park named for them—the Grasshopper glacier. Evidently they flew into it on one of their migrations, and have remained frozen in the ice for countless eons as raisins in a pudding."

"His mass migrations," said Entomologist Walton, "are the one thing which slightly suggests something corresponding to a germ of sense in the grasshopper."

"He is a stupid insect, entirely devoid of anything hinting at the devil's instinct to follow a leader; or the bees, of co-operation."

"Yet when, with a huge swarm of his fellows, he has eaten everything in his vicinity, some gregarious quality in him does bid him take wing with the rest of them and fly away, obviously bound for a fresh feeding ground. Even then the entire tank-headed swarm is as likely as not to fly into a glacier or a foodless desert or out to sea, if it is near enough."

Well, what accounts for the more or less periodic visitations of them? "How they started," replied the entomologist, "I don't know."

"Since then they undoubtedly have had seasons—or several seasons in succession—of extraordinary multiplication, due to favorable weather and food conditions, and this multiplication has continued until parasitic pressure and a few years bad weather have combined to reduce them again."

"And so on, from the carboniferous age down to 1931."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

—BY MRS. MARY MORTON—

MENU HINT
Spaghetti with Cheese
Stewed Tomatoes
Cabbage Salad Sliced Peaches
Sour Cream Cookies Tea
This menu is equally good for luncheon or dinner. The cheese provides the protein usually supplied by meat, and the spaghetti takes the place of potatoes. The spaghetti dish serves six.

Today's Recipes
Spaghetti with Cheese.—One-half pound spaghetti, one-half cup melted butter, one-half cup grated Parmesan or Roman cheese. Cook spaghetti until tender. Drain. Butter large plate well and sprinkle with grated cheese. Spread spaghetti on the plate. Pour melted butter over it and sprinkle grated cheese over it.

Sour Cream Cookies.—One-half cup butter, one and one-fourth cups brown sugar, two eggs, well beaten; three-fourths teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon cinnamon, one teaspoon soda, three cups flour (approximately), one cup heavy scoured cream, two teaspoons vanilla. Cream butter, add sugar and eggs. Beat until light, mix and sift thoroughly, salt, nutmeg, soda and flour. Add alternately with cream to first mixture. Flavor and mix to a soft dough, adding more flour if necessary. Roll out, shape, sprinkle with sugar. Place on a greased baking sheet and bake in a moderate oven (350 to 375 degrees Fahrenheit).

Suggestions
For cheese sticks, rounds, knots, squares, etc.: Cut rolled pastry into strips or squares with a knife. Sprinkle with grated cheese (bought or grated) and bake in a hot oven. Sprinkle with paprika after baking. These make delicious salad or soup accompaniments.

Nature Made Fruit To Be Eaten

—BY LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.—

Fruits, like vegetables, are regarded as natural foods. Nature certainly intended them to be eaten: the only way fruit trees and berry plants can spread over the earth in a state of nature is by having the seeds carried inside the bodies of animals and deposited in the dejecta at a place distant from the parent plant. To do this Nature has made the fruit surrounding the indigestible seeds luscious and attractive.

These considerations have caused fruits to be praised to the skies for their health giving qualities. Long before oranges as preventatives of high blood pressure were heard of there was the hackneyed saying, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away." Fruit and berries are certainly essential parts of any modern dietary. But it should be said also that they are not complete foods.

Fruits are naturally magnificent. Their skins or rinds keep bacteria and germs out. For this reason they are easy to preserve—I mean in storage—in a natural state.

Secondly, like vegetables, they star in bulk.

They are not economical foods in the sense that it takes a great deal to supply a day's energy. And the very fact that they are bulky prevents them from being compact, concentrated foods like eggs. If you had to carry a week's ration on your back on a walking tour, you would pick milk chocolate bars rather than apples.

Now are they balanced. They have almost no protein, and few of them (avocado pear, raisins and dates are the exceptions) have even mentionable quantities of fat.

Most of the fruits have good quantities of the necessary minerals—calcium especially, and also iron, sulphur and phosphorus.

Unbalanced and incomplete as they are, they have certain qualities in which they are strong. Their carbohydrate is in the form of very simple sugars—fruit sugar, or fructose, mostly, and maltose, and glucose. These substances are high-powered energizers—high-test gasoline.

Again, they are the chief source of vitamin C, which is the preventive of scurvy. As this disease affects infants and adults alike, it is a requirement of the diet at all ages. For this reason nursing mothers should eat fruit so that their milk will contain this necessary substance. The citrus fruits—oranges, lemons and limes—are especially rich in vitamin C. It is destroyed by cooking, but in modern methods of canning and preserving it is not destroyed.

Applied to disease conditions, fruits are generally irritating to delicate digestions, especially to patients with ulcer of the stomach (though orange juice is often agreeable). For constipation they are the best of remedies. They form alkaline ash in the body and tend to counteract acidosis, and hence have been heralded as preventatives of high blood pressure and the degenerative diseases of middle age.

Editor's Note: Six pamphlets by Dr. Clendinging can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed, stamped envelope, to Dr. Logan Clendinging, in care of this paper, or Central Press Association, 1435 East Twelfth Street, Cleveland, O. The pamphlets are: "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Youths Feel Uncertain Of Friends

—BY MRS. VIRGINIA LEE—

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: I am a boy 20 years of age. Two years ago I met a very pretty girl. I have gone with her many times but never steady."

"I feel very uncertain as to how she feels toward me. I know she likes me, but she won't tell me now much she really cares. I have told her many times that I loved her."

"How can I find out how much she really cares for me? I have gone out with other girls that she knows, and I know she doesn't get jealous of them. Is there some way that I can get her jealous, or don't you think that would help? I think I made my mistake when I told her that I loved her. I should never have told her that, should I?"

"MISTER X."

"DEAR MISS LEE: I'm in love with a very lovely girl and she told me once that she loved me, too, but she also said she wouldn't go with me steady."

"She is young and don't want to go steady with any boy, yet it is hard to love a girl and always see her with someone else."

"Should I try to forget this girl or wait until she is older and has a change of ideas? JACK."

Experts differ on the most effective way to win a girl, boys. Some say it's done by taking the citadel by storm—flushing her, in other words. Some say keep her guessing. I suppose different tactics are effective with different girls. Maybe you did make a mistake, Mister X, in telling the girl you loved her. Maybe she feels too sure of you. Possibly a little indifference on your part would have the desired effect. It looks to me as if she isn't seriously interested at present if she shows no concern about your going with other girls; but maybe she has good control of her emotions.

Ask her for another date, be very attentive and do your best to give her a good time. Then don't call her up or ask her for a date for a good long time. Take other girls out, and if you happen to be in the same crowd when you are with another girl, be pleasant but distant. If she asks if anything is the matter, tell her not a thing in the world. Then ask her for another date and be very attentive again.

Maybe these tactics won't win her. I don't pretend that they are infallible, but they are worth trying. If you lose, don't be too cast down. There are other girls, you know, and you're young.

And as for you, Jack, wait awhile. If the girl loves you you can hope that when she is a bit older she will go steady with you. Provided that by that time you still want the same girl.

If present-day machinery were abolished it is estimated it would take 3,000,000,000 laborers to replace the work done by the machinery in the United States.

Advice On Care of Skin

—BY GLADYS GLAD—

At this time of the year, when it seems as though the mercury in the thermometer never will stop climbing, very few skins require much cold cream or nourishing cream to keep them smooth and supple. Indeed, in some cases, even the use of a bit of cold cream as a powder base only is sufficient to cause a coarsening of the skin texture.

During the hot months the tiny pores are hard put to it to dispose of the excretions of the oil glands alone. And when cream is used on such skins these little organisms become overburdened with the task and become enlarged and coarse. Even if, after washing your face, you first close the pores with cold water, and then apply a light coating of cream for a powder base, the quickly open the pores, and the grease, no matter how small in quantity, will help to keep them open. And if you put on your thin film of cream and follow that with a cold water dousing to close the pores you will only shut the pores temporarily and harden the cream on the skin. The heat of the body and the air will speedily soften the cream and open the pores again.

The majority of us need only astringents in the hot weather to keep our skins looking cool and fresh. Add a few drops of benzoin to a basin of cold water and bathe your face and neck with it after you have cleansed your skin at night. Bathe your face as often as you can during the day with cool water, to which has been added a few drops of lemon juice, toilet water or benzoin. Or use a regular skin tonic or astringent to cleanse and refresh your skin, and to keep your pores closed under your makeup.

The extremely dry type of skin, however, usually requires just as much nourishing in the summer as in the winter. If your skin is of that extremely dry variety, and you continually expose it to the elements without protecting it in any way, your complexion can be ruined in the course of just one summer. It will become dry and leathery, discolorations will appear, and fine lines that are most difficult to erase will develop. A dry skin must be carefully protected with cream and powder during the hot months. And if the pores tend to become enlarged under this treatment a very mild astringent may be employed in conjunction with the cream.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

Scars
Susan and R. D. M.: The lemon juice or peroxide bleach will help to lighten the discolorations. For complete and effective eradication, scars should be attended by a skilled skin specialist in their early stages.

Bust
B. R.: The length of time within which you may expect results from the bust-developing instructions depends upon your own physical constitution and your perseverance. Keep at it, and you'll eventually obtain the results you desire.

Cocoa Butter
Ruth Molinaro: Cocoa butter is indeed used for fattening purposes. Massage your face nightly with warmed cocoa butter. This will help to fatten the tissues, and round out the facial contours.

Cosmetics
Miriam: I think that a soft ochre shade of powder, soft orange rouge, and light lipstick, would blend harmoniously with your coloring.

DEFEAT CENTRAL TO SHARE LEADERSHIP WITH ALL-STAR 10

Losers Eliminated By Crack Hurling Of Luttrell

Central High School faded out of the American League championship softball picture at Cox Field Tuesday night.

After beating Krippendorf four out of five times previously this season, the Bucs were not equal to the task of doing it again and lost to the defending league champions by a count of 7 to 1.

As a consequence, Krippendorf moved up into a tie with the All-Stars for the league leadership with the prospect that the co-leaders of the loop may have to play a post-season game to decide the league title.

The All-Stars have two more games to play, one with Central High and the other with St. Bridg while Krippendorf must play the parochial school a regulation nine-inning contest and also the last two innings of a protested game.

Krippendorf exhibited true championship form against its jinx opponent Tuesday night. Bob Luttrell, winning pitcher, parted with only four hits while his mates were cuffing Storer for a dozen bingles.

Glass, Central first baseman, who arrived late for the game, scored the solitary Buccaneer run in the sixth after he had led off with a single.

Krippendorf staged a four-run rally in the second on a single by Ernst, home run by Piche Luttrell, singles by Gutierrez and Jones and a double by Snell, Luttrell's second hit, a triple, followed by a fly produced another run in the fourth and the league champs added a marker in the seventh and also the eighth, three hits being grouped in each stanza. Ernst, shortstop, hit safely three times for the winners.

The Downers and the Graham Pats, who usually stage hotly contested games, will be at it again Wednesday night. Lineups:

SHADE TREES

IN SPRINKLING lawns give a thought to the moisture needs of the shade trees, suggest horticulturists of the bureau of plant industry. Often, in the case of trees on the home grounds, water is as important as plant food. Ordinarily all of a moderate sprinkling will be absorbed by the grass, and a copious watering is required to reach the roots of the trees.

With large trees it is sometimes helpful in very dry weather to make holes eighteen inches deep with a crowbar, and water liberally in these holes.

Trees standing in a lawn near a garden plot. If the branches of the latter extend over the garden, it is likely that the tree's roots spread into the garden soil and get nourishment from the fertilizer put on the flowers or vegetables. Trees standing in the lawn, however, may be starving. Many lawns have not plant food enough for either the grass or the trees.

In this case the gardener should see to the feeding of his trees. He should give special attention, also, to trees whose feeding area is partly covered with walks or drives.

Fertilizers that help trees also stimulate grass. Nitrate of soda or a sulphate of ammonia are special stimulants. Cottonseed meal and ground bone, tankage and dried blood are good for slower acting. Nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia is used at the rate of one pound to 800 square feet of surface at monthly intervals from May 1 to August 1, but no later. The other materials may be used up to one pound to ten or twenty square feet anytime. Late fall or early spring is the usual application.

Do not apply lime. Most forest trees prefer acid soil. Large trees on stiff soil may be fed by putting the fertilizer in crowbar holes and watering copiously. Although this treatment is in the experimental stage, it seems to be giving good results.

STATE GAME COUNCIL ABANDONS PLANS TO PROPOGATE BIG GAME

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 19.—Blasting one of the fondest dreams of Ohio sportsmen, conservation officials today admitted that years of work spent on the 9,000-acre Roosevelt game preserve in Scioto County, in an attempt to reconstruct the early American wilderness, may have been wasted.

For the first time since the opening gesture to rebuild the frontier was made, during the administration of former Governor Harry L. Davis, officials today confessed that they were "uncertain" about Ohio's fitness to propagate big game.

Sportsmen's hopes that the tract may some day be stocked with great herds of deer were given a set-back with the announcement that the state conservation council has decided, temporarily at least, to "retrench" at the Roosevelt preserve.

The first display of the council's uncertainty about the wisdom of proceeding to encourage wild life in an intensive manner was its recent decision to abolish the position of supervisor at the Roosevelt preserve, which was held by John Brown, International News Service was informed by A. F. Moon of Conover, chairman of the conservation council.

Brown's position was vacated and the council decided to supplant Brown with one of the game protectors residing in that area.

The game protector selected, it was ordered, will supervise the wild game propagation in addition to his other duties, indicating the council no longer regarded the intensive encouragement of big game as important as it was previously considered.

"Some authorities on big game propagation believe it is futile to spend more money on the project, holding that Ohio is not fitted to be a home of wild animals," Chairman Moon said.

"For one thing," he said, "some expert sportsmen believe deer and other animals find 9,000 acres too small a playground. For them such a tract really constitutes 'cramped quarters,'" he said.

Answering this argument, some sportsmen contend that the present tract ought to be sold, and the money used to lease it, and more extensive acreage, in an attempt to give deer all the space they need, according to Moon.

"Some sportsmen in that section would be glad to see wild game propagation plans abandoned, because it would give them room to hunt," he added.

Damage done by roaming deer also has given council members some worry. Claims against the state were turned into the sundry claims board during the session of the last legislature, asking payment for damage caused by deer which left customary haunts.

Moon said the problem is a weighty one which has not been solved. Long study and consideration will be given to the subject before a definite decision is reached deciding whether further encouragement of big game is futile, he asserted.

INTRODUCING THE "FINEST" In Which You Meet Xenia's Safety Guardians

POLICE CHIEF CORNWELL

Introducing Omi H. Cornwell, chief of the Xenia police department since March 20, 1930, whom you may or may not recognize in his natty new uniform.

Born in Columbus July 16, 1893, he was educated in Central High School there and then became a journeyman electrician. He joined Machine Gun Co., Fourth Ohio Infantry, February 28, 1910 and has since enjoyed a high record of military service.

Cornwell saw service on the Mexican border in 1916 and during the late war served two years in France with the cracked Rainbow Division, being awarded three times by shell fragments.

After being identified for eighteen months with the police force at his former home in Marion, O., he came to Xenia in 1925 as military instructor at the O. S. and S. O. Home. Resigning this position, he served for eighteen months as a deputy sheriff assigned to the duties of county road patrolman. Then he resigned and returned to his old position at the Home for a year.

Cornwell, standing highest in a civil service examination, was appointed police chief March 20, 1930, succeeding M. E. Graham, who has since retired on pension. During the brief space of a year and a half he has almost entirely revolutionized the methods of crime detection on the department.

Until a few months ago, when he resigned as commandant of Company L, Xenia unit of the Ohio National Guard, Cornwell had been identified with the National Guard for twenty-one years. He joined the local company January 16, 1926 as a second lieutenant from Company D, 166th Infantry at Marion, and was made a first lieutenant July 15, 1926. In this capacity he assumed command of the unit December 26, 1926 and on February 2, 1927 was elevated to the rank of captain.

The police chief is married and is the father of three children, two boys and a girl. He is 35 years of age.

CYCLIST HURT WHEN THROWN BY GRAVEL

Harold Pierce, 20, near Bellbrook, is confined in Miami Valley Hospital, Dayton, suffering from a fracture at the base of the skull and other head injuries received in an accident near Bellbrook early Wednesday morning.

Pierce, who is the son of Elmo Pierce, Waynesville - Bellbrook Road, was on his way to work at the Frigidair Corp., Dayton, when the accident occurred. He was riding on a motorcycle and was thrown when the machine struck fresh gravel. The accident occurred in front of the home of Perry Sackett, two miles south of Bellbrook. Pierce was taken into the Sackett home and Dr. A. N. Vandeman was called. He was later removed to the Dayton hospital in a Ralph M. Need ambulance.

SIX OPERATED AT TONSIL CLINIC

Six children underwent operations for the removal of their tonsils at a clinic under the direction of the local Red Cross chapter at the offices of Drs. Madden and Shields Wednesday morning. Three of the cases were from Xenia, two from Cedarville and one from Ross Township.

Assisting in the operations were Drs. Marshall Best and W. T. Ungard, Miss Mary Smith, former city health nurse and Miss Nellie Weaver.

LANGS SUCCUMB TO PITCHING OF "RED" MEDER OF ST. PAUL TEAM

That helpless feeling at bat was experienced by the Lang Chevrolet, 1930 city champs, as they were blanked by St. Paul Lutheran of Springfield, 10 to 0 in a seven-inning softball argument on the Y. M. C. A. diamond at Springfield Tuesday night.

"Red" Meder, the speed ball pitcher who held the slugging idle Hour Club to two hits here the preceding evening, again presided on the mound for the Lutherans against the Chevrolets, and that explains everything.

Their lineup augmented by four players affiliated with other Xenia softball teams, the Chevrolets likewise succumbed to the redhead's fast ball. Meder struck out thirteen batters and allowed only two hits, both of which were scratch blows.

The famous St. Paul hurler fanned every player on the Xenia team except Pitcher Harry Williams at least once and he whiffed four batters twice. After the first two batters had fanned ingloriously, Williams hit safely over first base in the third inning but was forced at second. In the fourth, with one batter out on strikes, Lunsford hit a pop infield single, after which Ruse hit into a double play. Two other Xenia players reached base on walks and another on an error.

Williams, pitching for Langs, was combed for thirteen hits. The St. Paul team, in scoring its twenty-eighth victory in twenty-nine games this season, tallied three runs in the initial round, five more in the fourth and two in the sixth. Maxton, left fielder, hit two homers and a single for St. Paul, while Swan contributed a brace of doubles and a single, Cooney a triple and two singles and Brannigan a double and a pair of ordinary hits.

National Farm Outlook

By ARTHUR H. JENKINS
Editor, The Farm Journal

Sadder days for bugs are looming. There are just three of what may be called the standard poisons for insects. The first is arsenic in some form which is used where the insect we are after can be made to eat it, and thus develop acute stomach trouble. In this class are arsenate of lead, paris green, sodium arsenate, calcium arsenate and several others.

But some insects don't eat or chew, and these have to be fought with some poison which kills on contact. The standard poisons for these pests are nicotine and pyrethrum, one made from tobacco and the other from two varieties of the chrysanthemum flower.

Of course our friends the scientists and research men are always looking for something new and better, and in this field of insect poisons they think they have something better in a new substance called rotenone. This seems to have the desirable characteristic of killing insects in both ways—it kills if it touches and it kills if they eat it.

The chief trouble with rotenone is that it comes from the root of a tropical plant, and it is not easy to get together enough of it to sell commercially at a competitive price. A bug-killer that costs too much is not much better than the old reliable method of putting the insect on one brick and hitting him with another.

However, this difficulty is pretty certain to be got over, as most difficulties can be. The scientists are looking for other plants whose roots produce the poison, they are planning to grow the tropical plants nearer home, and finally they are trying to make the poison synthetically, which would be the best of all if they could manage it.

Rotenone has the further advantage that it is death to insects, and has a paralyzing effect on fish, but does not seem to affect animals or fowl. An apple pretty well coated with the stuff can be eaten without damage, which is more than can be said of the arsenic preparations we have been using to protect our fruit.

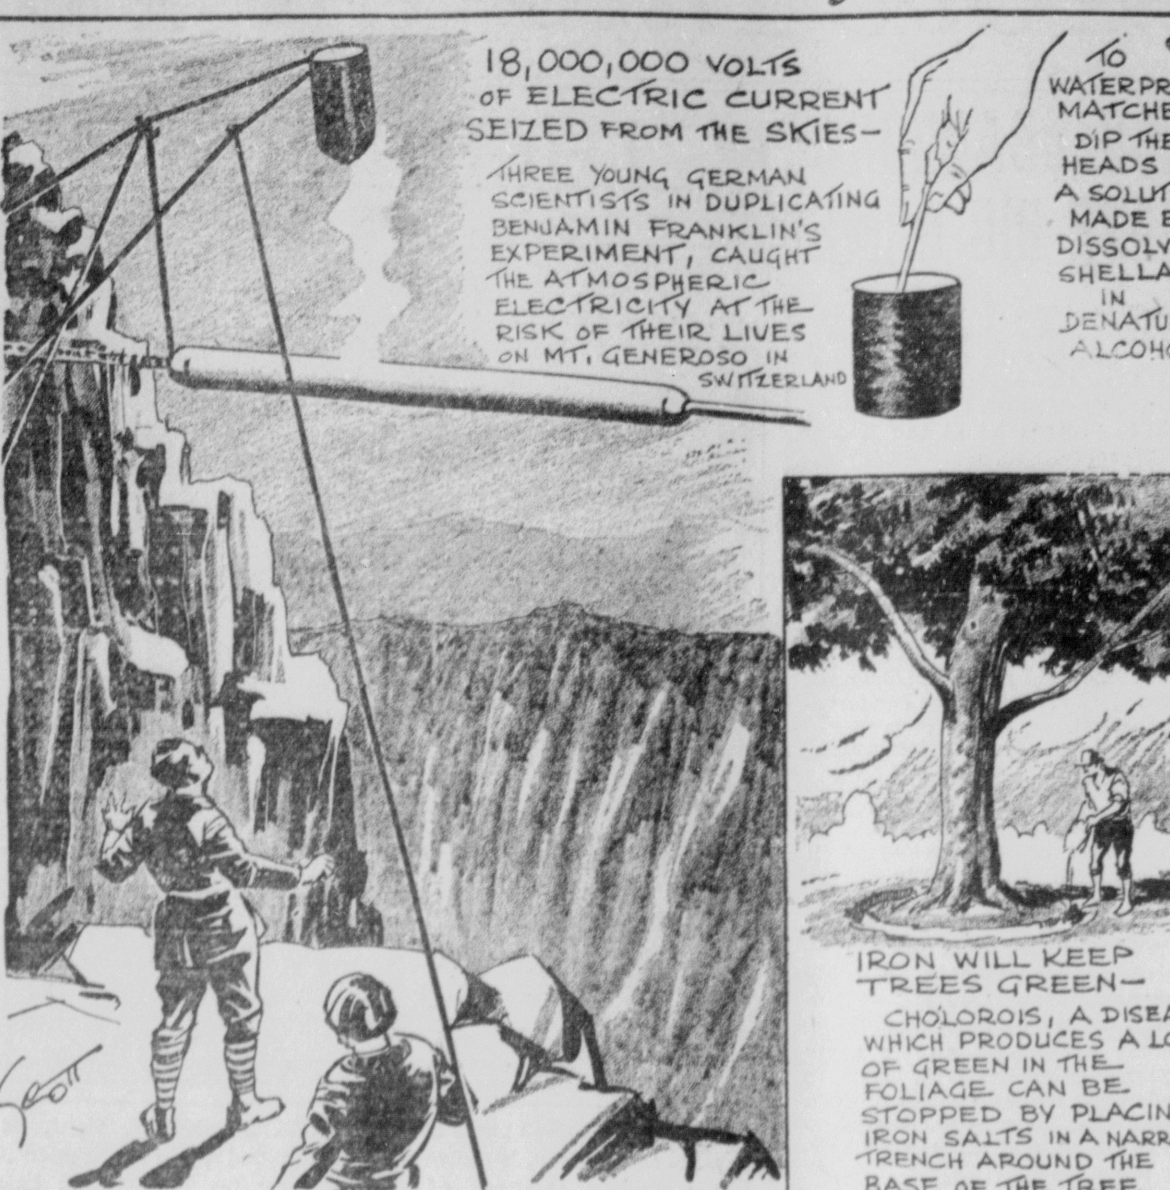

Altogether, if we can get enough rotenone cheaply enough, it looks as if this round in the endless fight against the insect tribe can be awarded to Battling Homo Sapiens.

Worn 'Em 73 Years

A record of old and faithful service which would make any manufacturer turn green with envy is pictured here on the 73-year-old feet of Jacob Miller, aged resident of Pleasant Hill, Mo. It's the boots, you know, that we're talking about. Mr. Miller bought them at Millburg, Pa., in 1858 and has worn them for 73 years. They still have the original heels and soles.

READ THIS FIRST:

Nita and Natalie Dudley, orphaned sisters, leave their home town, Truesdale, for New York where they hope to make a start on money Nita has borrowed from Natalie's former employer, Richard Marlen. Nita, first meeting with failure everywhere, becomes a night club entertainer through the friendship of Charles Young, a good-looking theatrical agent, whom the two girls met on the train. Natalie is unable to find a job and lives on what her sister gives her. At the night club Nita meets Alvin Brady, Manhattan playboy, who falls in love with her immediately, taking her out every night and showering her with attention. Nita leads him on, while Natalie, who has fallen in love with him secretly, hates her sister for her treatment of the young millionaire. Nita breaks a date with Alvin and when later, he finds her at the club dancing with Charles, he approaches them and unable to contain himself, knocks Charles under a table. Nita is rushed from the club by Anthony Widdies the proprietor, and he cautions her not to talk to reporters about the fight. She senses the publicity value in it for her and immediately phones a tabloid newspaper. Her face beams from the front pages the next day.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER 14

"I KNEW IT! I knew IT!" Nita cried, stomping her foot in its snubbed kid sandal.

"He said just to tell you that you needn't come to the Gardens tonight. Like that—and hung up," Natalie repeated.

"Didn't he even ask to talk to me?" Nita seemed surprised.

"Not after I told him you were out. You said you were, even if Mr. Ziegfeld called."

"Oh, well . . . I mean it. Did he sound much in a huff, Natalie?"

"No . . . not considering he was firing you."

"That part won't worry me . . . I guess I can get a better job at the Golden Sandal. I guess that wouldn't help Anthony Widdies' blood pressure," she sat on the side of the couch, slipping on a robe.

"I guess Anthony thinks I played a mean trick—grabbing off a bit of publicity for myself," she reached for the green tabloid lying on the coffee table.

"Whoop-pee!" she cried gleefully, dancing about the room, rustling and waving the newspaper over her head. "I wouldn't take a thousand—ten thousand—cash for this!"

Her round face smiled from the very front page . . . the tabloid whose publisher owed his success to the steady policy of adhering to the slogan "All the news that are fit to print." He printed them in the name of art, of course.

Nita had her knees crossed, and with one shoulder strap of the chiffon gown hanging over her arm effectively, showing it had been broken.

The caption beneath the picture read:

"Don't think Nita Dudley, little song bird who nests on the Palace Gardens' piano, is the kind of girl who lets her shoulder strap slip on purpose—see story on Page 3 of how a millionaire fought over her last night."

While the story on page three told how "frightened pretty little Nita" had been when the rich playboy, in a jealous mania, sent her dancing partner and agent, crashing to the floor the photograph accompanying the inside page story showed Nita smiling and showing her teeth like a girl in a dental paste advertisement.

In still another pose Nita was pulling her sophisticated trick, tilting her chin as high as it would go, and looking down at her with a hovering, provocatively about her well-rouged lips. She regarded the public through half closed lids.

"Millionaire playboy plays too roughly," said the caption.

"Nita Dudley received a broken shoulder strap and a torn frock when Alvin Brady, wealthy playboy, got rough and rowdy," the story followed.

"There has been a rumor going about that the wealthy young man has been carting orchids to her door ever since the first night she climbed to the top of the Gardens' piano and moaned something about Memphis' Blues . . ."

Charles Young, her agent, did the moaning last night after a mean blow to his left jaw, dealt by young Brady.

"Brady fell for Nita, but Charles fell for Brady . . . with a crash that put the merry-mad crowd at the Gardens into a frenzy."

The ring of the telephone interrupted Nita's reading aloud the stories for the third time.

"Still out—"

"Even if it's Mr. Ziegfeld himself," Natalie finished the sentence for her.

"Really—I am expecting Zizzy to call."

"Say he's Tom Dunne, the reporter you met last night," Natalie informed Nita.

Nita took the telephone quickly and said in her cheerfulness tone: "Hello there, big pencil and quip man!" She thought that quite New

"You liked my story, then?"

Yorkish. She smiled as she listened to his answer.

"Sure—love to have you come up to my place," she said. "No, I haven't the ingredients, but—oh, you'll bring them. Fine."

Nita juggled a cocktail shaker and aped extreme sophistication.

It was hard for Natalie not to believe she had had considerable practice. And you could tell by the way her visitor accepted the bright liquid she flipped into the little crystal glasses with gold rims—she had bought the shaker and the glasses in a hurry that morning at Wannamaker's—that he thought she was a connoisseur both in mixing and tasting.

"A hair of your pet doggie," said Nita, as she handed a brimming glass to New York's best-looking tabloid reporter—Tom Dunne.

"Just what I need to clear away the old hangover," he answered as he took the glass, not bothering to raise himself from his comfortable position in the arm chair.

"Pardon my low brow, won't you?" he said in a bored voice, but perhaps they were supposed to construe that his apology for not rising.

"Here's how—if you don't know how!" he said, and he emptied the glass at a gulp.

"Come again!" he held out his glass.

"Down the same trail," she answered, filling the glass again.

"Say, when you walked into the office last night," he said, leaning a little forward in his chair. "I said, 'there's the bit of honey you've been living these twenty-seven years to find.' Did you think I was sort of dazed when the editor told me to write your story?"

"Far from that," answered Nita, looking into his eyes.

He took that as encouragement. Nita seated herself on the couch, across from him, making a mental note she would be especially nice to him as he had certainly managed to play her up in his paper.

"You're not drinking?" he seemed surprised.

"No—strange as it may seem," she smiled, but poured some in a glass because he seemed so perturbed. She only played at sipping it because Nita had an idea. And Nita Dudley wasn't the kind to fumble any chances like this one.

She was glad she had worn her new black satin lounging pajamas, with their trailing, pleated legs, the satin raveled her hair with its gloss. Her face was like a cameo in an ebony frame.

"Say, I wrote a half column more about you but they didn't have room to use it," Tom announced.

"Really?"

"How did you like that line 'piano sitting song bird'?" he wanted to know.

"Fine," not very enthusiastically as she remembered she had coined it herself.

"You really liked my story then?" the shiny-eyed reporter asked, mellowed by the concoction. He wanted to hear her praise his work.

But she didn't smile. Her face became a little sad. Her painted lips pouted. Her lashes lay on her cheeks.

"But—it made Anthony Widdies fire me," she said in a small, very feminine voice.

"Oh, I say . . ." regretfully.

"As soon as he read the paper he called—said I need not come to the Gardens any more . . ." she said.

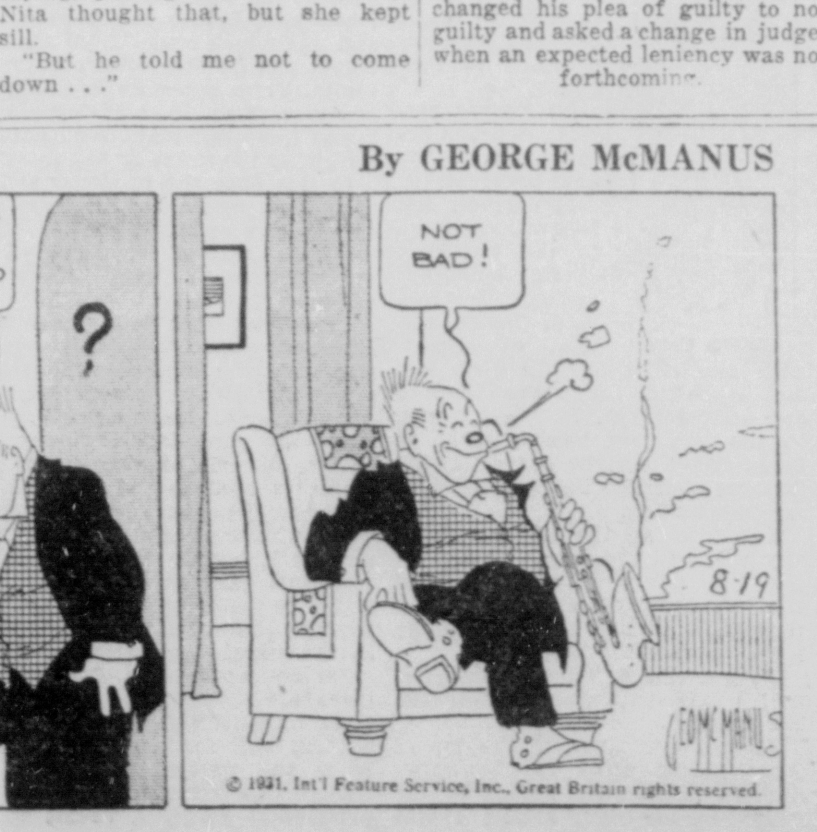

Tom thought her on the verge of tears and sat by her on the couch. They had both ignored Natalie during the whole time.

"Why, you're twice as valuable now, after the publicity," he was saying, patting her arm tenderly. Nita thought that, but she kept still.

"But he told me not to come down . . ."

In reply to Alphonse "Scarface Al" Capone's plea that he be given a change of venue from the court of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson in Chicago, when he is tried on charges of defrauding Uncle Sam in income taxes, Federal Judge John P. Barnes (above) may hear the case. The notorious gangster changed his plea of guilty to not guilty and asked a change in judges when an expected leniency was not forthcoming.

The Theater

With her vacation just begun, Ann Harding isn't devoting many thoughts to pictures these days but the studio is still worrying about her next vehicle.

It may be a story called "Prestige" for which Johnny Farrow wrote the continuity. Ann's role would be the wife of a young diplomat who is given his first assignment in a penal colony in French Indo-China. The couple's struggle to resist the demoralizing influence of the climate and of their surroundings furnishes the drama. The star likes the story.

Mary Doran of the films is the bride of Joseph Sherman, publicity director. The ceremony was a quite one at San Diego and the bride and bridegroom departed on a honeymoon to Agua Caliente, Mexico.

When a new player really clicks in Hollywood, parts come in a rush. Peggy Shannon made good and now is starting her around with Ina and that gives him the inside track. Ames has given several fine performances and is already under contract to RKO.

Lupe Velez is lunching regularly these days with Lawrence Tibbett... Charlie Farrell has settled down no end since his marriage, has turned serious, worries about his pictures and all that... Marjorie White and Eddie Tierney have just celebrated their seventh wedding anniversary... Madge Bellamy and her mother are in Europe... Tom Mix Begins his first Universal Western October 15... Now he's been initiated, they can't keep Will Rogers out of a tuxedo. He's making his third dress-up picture.

fourth picture in three months. It will be the heroine of "Touchdown," the football story in which Richard Arlen has a featured role. It was with Arlen that the red-head made her first hit—the telephone operator in "The Secret Call."

There is only one interpretation to Paramount's campaign on Peggy and Sylvia Sidney. The studio is grooming the girls for stardom. Next role in line for Sylvia will be in "Ladies of the Big House," a story of women in prison. Louis Weitzenkorn, author of the impassioned "Five Star Final," is doing the adaptation and directorial labors will be shared by Max Marcin and Louis Gasnier.

Ina Claire goes most women one better. Tradition allows them the last word, but she has it in her contract. For this reason it is pretty well conceded at Radio Pictures that Robert Ames will play opposite the star in "Glamour." There was some talk of John Halliday but Ames goes

Lingeringly I turn away,

FOUR BRING SUITS FOR DIVORCE HERE OTHER COURT NEWS

After more than thirty-four years of married life, Mrs. Nora D. Duellman who, with her daughter, Fay, operates Rest Haven Park, a camp situated on the Dayton-Xenia Pike, seeks a divorce from Louis W. Duellman on grounds of gross neglect of duty and extreme cruelty in a suit filed in Common Pleas Court.

Married in Dayton June 16, 1897, Mrs. Duellman declares that since 1912 she has been supporting herself and has helped support her husband who, she claims, spends most of his money on drinking.

She and her daughter, Mrs. Duellman, sets forth in the petition, have lived at their camp on the Dayton Pike for the last seven years. Her husband, she claims, has contributed nothing toward the purchase price or the upkeep of the camp.

Requesting an injunction preventing her husband from molesting her, coming to the park and from withdrawing certain money, Mrs. Duellman asks to be awarded alimony and desires to have the defendant divested of any interest in their real estate in Montgomery County.

Suit for divorce from her third husband, Oliver Williamson, 1200 E. Main St., has been filed by Rebecca Williamson who, court records show, has already divorced two previous husbands. She married her latest spouse October 20, 1922 and they have no children. Charging gross neglect of duty and extreme cruelty, the plaintiff asserts her husband twice drew a gun and threatened to kill her.

Ethel Helm has instituted suit for divorce from George Helm, to whom she was married November 24, 1920. They have no children. The plaintiff claims she has been compelled to depend upon charity and her own labors to obtain food and clothing.

Asserting his wife left home August 5, 1929 and never returned, Howard Coughlin has brought suit for divorce from Harriett Coughlin on grounds of gross neglect of duty. The couple was married March 17, 1924. They have no children.

Charles Harness, A. W. Tresise and S. M. McKay were named commissioners.
